FOR SALE—Rhode Island Red eggs $1 per setting of 15. P. Krouk R. D. 1, Grand Rapids, Wis.—2t p.

Rock is being brought by the city for the purpose of raising the wall along the river near the library building. It is the desire to build this wall high and strong enough so that in case there is another flood there will not be the danger of washing out the street that there was during the high water last fall.

H. A. Sackler has leased the building in the rear of the Gardner block on Oak street and will occupy the place with his upholstery and picture framing business as soon as the place is ready for occupancy. It is being entirely rebuilt, with a new front and when completed will present a very neat appearance.

Walter S. Gardner, who is located at Spokane, Wash., in remitting for his Tribune, writes that they have had some very cold weather there during the past winter, but that no matter what the weather conditions are that it is always "Sunny Old Spokane" to the boosters. He says that the paper mill at Millwood, several miles east of Spokane, is nearly finished and that he is beginning to think that Grand Rapids is good enough for him. Says, in fact, that he expects to return here some time this spring.

REPORTS WORK PROGRESSING NICELY.

Louis Amundson, acting highway commissioner for Wood County, was in the city on Monday, and while here favored the Tribune office with a pleasant call.

Mr. Amundson reports that he has been engaged in hauling rock in the town of Rudolph for the road building that will be done in that town during the coming spring, and that all of the rock for the work has been delivered on the premises.

He had a total of 417 loads of rock hauled, and as there were indications that the sleighing would play out within a short time, he hurried the work forward as rapidly as possible. The result was that he had a total of 17 teams working part of the time, they making four trips a day. The stone was purchased from the farmers along the road who reaped the benefit of getting rid of their stone and being paid for the material at the same time.

The town of Rudolph will have $1200.00 to spend on road building and this, it is expected, will build about three-quarters of a mile of road. The highway to be improved is the main traveled road between this city and Rudolph station, and the work will commence at the city limits, lying just north of which there is an exceedingly sandy stretch and when completed this part of the road, instead of being the worst, will be the best on the whole line.

There are only four towns in the county that will have any state aid this year, they being Rudolph, Seneca, Hansen and Dexter. All of which declared to raise the sum of $100, giving them $1200 with the aid given them by the county and state.

Mr. Amundson says that towns desiring state aid for 1913 should vote the amount they are willing to raise at the coming spring election and they will be in the list to obtain state and county aid when the next appointment is made. The working of the law is such that a town that votes to raise a certain sum for road building will receive the same amount from the state and also a like amount from the county and where there is money left over, that is not taken up by the counties it will be apportioned to the counties that do call for aid.

For instance, Albia Wood county was entitled to $8600 this year from the state. It receives only $1200, this being the amount voted to be raised by the towns, and the remainder of the amount goes to other counties in the state.

The highway map that was recently prepared by the committee appointed by the county board has been approved by the state commission and is now in the hands of the county clerk, and will be on exhibition in his office where it can be seen at all times by those interested in the matter.

He will also have a number of duplicates prepared, and these will be sent to the town clerks in the county, so that it will be possible to see what roads have been selected by the committee as a part of the system.

These roads that have been selected by the committee will be known as the county system of prospective state highways. It might also be stated that after a road has been improved in accordance with the plan outlined by the state and has been accepted by the state commission, it becomes a part of the state system, and after that will be taken over by the state and kept in repair by the state under the supervision of the county highway commissioner, all repairs to be made under his direction. This will preclude the possibility of a standard macadam road being spoiled or injured by dumping material onto it that is not properly suited for that particular section.

Mr. Amundson states that in sections where the new law is understood that the farmers and others are quite enthusiastic over the plan, but that other places they are not as yet very well informed on the law, and in such places they are liable to be suspicious and afraid that they are going to be taken.

Some counties in the state have been under the state highway system for several years past, and where this is the case they are the most enthusiastic, and were the first to take advantage of the state aid plan. At the road school held in Madison recently there were a number of these commissioners present and they gave some valuable pointers concerning difficulties they had overcome in their respective localities.

It might be well to state here that the work done under the present system is performed under the supervision of the state, and when the county commissioner tackles a piece of road he is at liberty to call on one of the state commissioners for advice, who will come right to the premises and give the county commissioner the advantage of counsel from a man who has been trained in the business and who has been up against all the difficulties that are to be encountered in the various kinds of soil to be found in the state. Also, that the county commissioner has no check on his job, and that if the commission finds at any time that he is not performing his work properly or is not competent to handle it in the manner it should be, they can discharge him. It will be seen by this that the county commissioner is obliged to make good or else stop out and allow somebody else to fill the position.

CHARGED WITH ATTEMPTED MURDER.

Charles Maxwell was brought to this city on Thursday and taken before Justice Brown on a charge of assault with intent to kill, the victim in the case being Alex Gavre.

It seems that Maxwell and Gavre had had trouble before at which time Gavre struck Maxwell over the head with a wrench, inflicting quite a painful wound. After the fracas Maxwell had Gavre arrested and the latter paid a fine.

Then the men got into another war of words during which Maxwell picked up a cant hook and struck Gavre over the head, fracturing his skull and inflicting him so badly that it was expected at the time that Gavre was going to die from his wound.

When the case came up for hearing an adjournment was taken for one week in order to see how the wound was going to result and to make preparations for the trial.

At last reports Gavre was gradually getting better, although his recovery must necessarily be slow owing to the serious nature of his wound.

Bowling Alleys Lost.

A. P. Mulroy left on Monday for Milwaukee, it being his intention to discover if possible what has become of the three bowling alleys ordered by Mr. Peersonboom and which some time ago. The alleys were shipped a week ago last Monday, and apparently they dropped off the face of the earth immediately afterward and nothing has since been heard of them. The agent here has made every effort possible to locate the car in which they were shipped, but was unable to do so. As it was they expected to have the alleys installed and in operation long before this time, they have naturally kept the wires hot trying to locate the missing property.

Mr. Mulroy discovered the lost car in Milwaukee, where it had been standing since the alleys were loaded. He got them started for Grand Rapids on Monday and they arrived the following day and are now being placed in position.

Indian Jeff in Jail.

Indian Jeff was brought to this city from Pittsville on Friday on a charge of robbery. He signified his willingness to plead guilty to the charge against him and was taken before Judge Park who sentenced him to three years in state prison.

Indian Jeff is well known over Pittsville where in the early days he was known to be about as kindly with an ax as a man ever becomes. It seems, however, that of late years he has fallen from grace and committed several minor offenses, which had a tendency to get him a longer sentence in this case.

S. V. Topping left today for Wapello, Iowa, where he will again commence work on his drudging contract.

Tuberculosis Doctor Here.

Dr. Maude Williams who is sent out by the Wisconsin Anti-Tuberculosis association, arrives in the city today, March 13th, with the intention of spending two weeks in this city, her mission being to give advice relative to the suppression of tuberculosis.

Dr. Williams will address the different schools on the subject of tuberculosis and will also visit private homes where requested to do so, and give advice on the subject of caring for those afflicted with the disease.

Although her services will be free and given cheerfully, she will not intrude upon anyone and those who desire her advice and help must notify her of the fact, either by letter or otherwise, giving their name and address.

The people of Grand Rapids are able to secure these services because of the money obtained by the sale of Christmas seals in 1911. Anybody desiring the doctor's services should have no hesitancy about calling for them, as it is the desire to give everybody benefit at the benefit of her knowledge and experience.

BASKET BALL GAME WAS A GOOD ONE.

The game of basket ball on rollers at the Amusement hall last night between the Grand Rapids and Marsh field teams was closely contested and exciting all the way thru and the locals won by a score of 8 to 4 notwithstanding the fact that one member of the local team went to sleep in the fore part of the game and I woke up only a couple of times during the entire contest.

The two teams seemed to be pretty evenly matched and there was considerable playing done in both halves to make a score, when the locals made a basket from the field, and the first half ended 3 to 0.

In the second half both teams played harder than they did at first and there wasn't a second when there was not something doing, and scores were more frequent than in the first half. This home team added six to their count, and the visitors also scored six in this half, leaving the locals two points to the good.

CHARGED WITH ATTEMPTED MURDER.

Charles Maxwell was brought to this city on Thursday and taken before Justice Brown on a charge of assault with intent to kill, the victim in the case being Alex Gavre.

It seems that Maxwell and Gavre had had trouble before, at which time Gavre struck Maxwell over the head with a wrench, inflicting quite a painful wound. After the fracas Maxwell had Gavre arrested and the latter paid a fine.

Then the men got into another war of words, during which Maxwell picked up a cant hook and struck Gavre over the head, fracturing his skull and injuring him so badly that it was expected at the time that Gavre was going to die from his wound.

When the case came up for hearing an adjournment was taken for one week in order to see how the wound was going to result and to make preparations for the trial.

At last reports Gavre was gradually getting better, altho his recovery must necessarily be slow owing to the serious nature of his wound.

Bowling Alleys Lost.

A. P. Mulroy left on Monday for Milwaukee, it being his intention to discover, if possible, what has become of the three bowling alleys ordered by Mr. Peerenboom and himself some time ago. The alleys were shipped a week ago last Monday, and apparently they dropped off the face of the earth immediately afterward, and nothing has since been heard of them. The agent here has made every effort possible to locate the car in which they were shipped, but was unable to do so. As it was expected to have the alleys installed and in operation long before this time, they have naturally kept the wires hot trying to locate the missing property.

Mr. Mulroy discovered the lost car in Milwaukee, where it had been standing since the alleys were loaded. He got them started for Grand Rapids on Monday and they arrived the following day and are now being placed in position.

Percentage of people who have receptacles for their mail, 96.

Average weight of mail taken out by each carrier, 79 pounds.

Average number of letters handled daily by each carrier, 436.

Average number of all kinds of mail handled daily by each carrier, 684.

Average number of miles traveled daily by each carrier, 14 1/2.

Indian Jeff in Jail.

Indian Jeff was brought to this city from Pittsville on Friday on a charge of robbery. He signified his willingness to plead guilty to the charge against him and was taken before Judge Park who sentenced him to three years in state prison.

Indian Jeff is well known over Pittsville where in the early days he was known to be about as handy with an ax as a man ever becomes. It seems, however, that of late years he has fallen from grace and committed several minor offenses, which had a tendency to get him a longer sentence in this case.

Tuberculosis Doctor Here.

Dr. Maude Williams, who is sent out by the Wisconsin Anti-Tuberculosis association, arrives in the city today, March 13th, with the intention of spending two weeks in this city, her mission being to give advice relative to the suppression of tuberculosis.

Dr. Williams will address the different schools on the subject of tuberculosis and will also visit private homes where requested to do so, and give advice on the subject of caring for those afflicted with the disease.

Altho her services will be free and given cheerfully, she will not intrude upon anyone, and those who desire her advice and help must notify her of the fact, either by letter or otherwise, giving their name and address.

The people of Grand Rapids are able to secure these services because of the money obtained by the sale of Christmas seals in 1911. Anybody desiring the doctor's services should have no hesitancy about calling for them, as it is the desire to give everybody needing it the benefit of her knowledge and experience.

BASKET BALL GAME WAS A GOOD ONE.

The game of basket ball on rollers at the Amusement hall last night between the Grand Rapids and Marshfield teams was closely contested and exciting all the way thru, and the locals won out by a score of 8 to 6 notwithstanding the fact that one member of the local team went to sleep in the fore part of the game and woke up only a couple of times during the entire contest.

The two teams seemed to be pretty evenly matched and there was considerable playing done before either side made a score, when the locals made a basket from the field, and the first half ended 3 to 0.

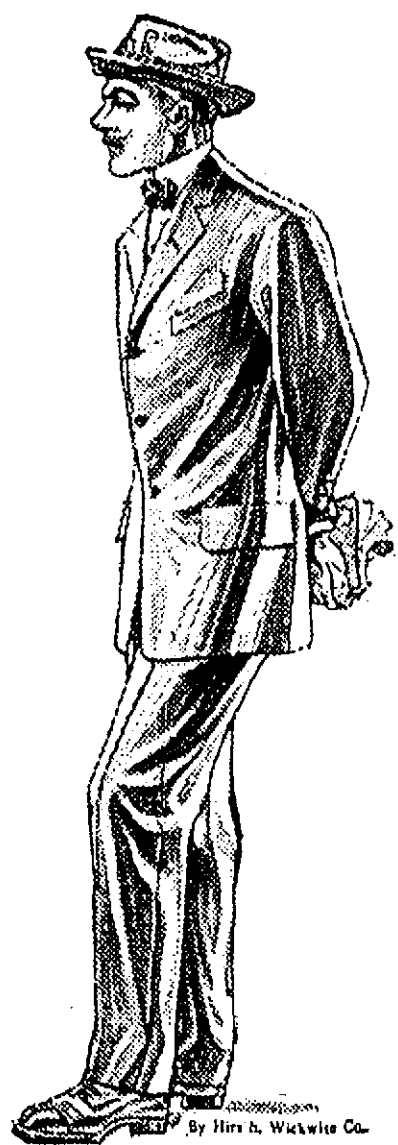

In the second half both teams played harder than they did at first and there wasn't a second when there was not something doing, and scores were more frequent than in the first half. The home team added six to their count, and the visitors also scored six in this half, leaving the locals two points to the good.

Rock being hauled by the city for the purpose of raising the wall along the river near the library building. It is the desire to build this wall high and strong enough so that in case there is another flood there will not be the danger of washing out the street that there was during the high water last fall.

H. A. Saecier has leased the building in the rear of the Gardner block on Oak street and will occupy the place with his upholstery and picture framing business as soon as the place is ready for occupancy. It is being entirely rebuilt, with a new front and when completed will present a very neat appearance.

Walter S. Gardner, who is located at Spokane, Wash., in remitting for his Tribune, writes that they have had some very cold weather there during the past winter, but that no matter what the weather conditions are that it is always "Sonny Old Spokane" to the boosters. He says that the paper mill at Millwood, several miles east of Spokane, is nearly finished and that he is beginning to think that Grand Rapids is good enough for him. Says, in fact, that he expects to return here some time this spring.

REPORTS WORK PROGRESSING NICELY.

Louis Amundson, acting highway commissioner for Wood County, was in the city on Monday, and while here favored the Tribune office with a pleasant call.

Mr. Amundson reports that he has been engaged in hauling rock in the town of Rudolph for the road building that will be done in that town during the coming spring, and that all of the rock for the work has been delivered on the premises.

He had a total of 417 loads of rock hauled, and as there were indications that the sleighing would play out within a short time, he hauled the work forward as rapidly as possible. The result was that he had a total of 17 teams working part of the time, they making four trips a day. The stone was purchased from the farmers along the road, who reaped the benefit of getting rid of their stone and being paid for the material at the same time.

The town of Rudolph will have $200.00 to spend on road building and this, it is expected, will build about three-quarters of a mile of road. The highway to be improved is the main traveled road between this city and Rudolph station, and the work will commence at the city limits, lying just north of which there is an exceedingly sandy stretch, and when completed this part of the road, instead of being the worst, will be the best on the whole line.

There are only four towns in the county that will have any state aid this year, they being Rudolph, Seneca, Hansen and Dexter, all of which decided to raise the sum of $400, giving them $1200 with the aid given them by the county and state.

Mr. Amundson says that towns desiring state aid for 1913 should vote the amount they are willing to raise at the coming spring election, and they will be in the list to obtain state and county aid when the next apportionment is made. The working of the law is such that a town that votes to raise a certain sum for road building will receive the same amount from the state and also a like amount from the county, and where there is money left over, that is not taken up by the counties, it will be apportioned to the counties that do call for aid.

For instance: Although Wood county was entitled to $3500 this year from the state, it receives only $1200, this being the amount voted to be raised by the towns, and the remainder of the amount goes to other counties in the state.

The highway map that was recently prepared by the committee appointed by the county board has been approved by the state commission and is now in the hands of the county clerk, and will be on exhibition in his office where it can be seen at all times by those interested in the matter.

He will also have a number of duplicates prepared, and these will be sent to the town clerks in the county, so that it will be possible to see what roads have been selected by the committee as a part of the system.

These roads that have been selected by the committee will be known as the county system of prospective state highways. It might also be stated that after a road has been improved in accordance with the plan outlined by the state and has been accepted by the state commission, it becomes a part of the state system, and after that will be taken over by the state and kept in repair by the state under the supervision of the county highway commissioner, all repairs to be made under his direction. This will preclude the possibility of a standard macadam road being spoiled or injured by dumping material onto it that is not properly suited for that particular section.

Mr. Amundson states that in sections where the new law is understood that the farmers and others are quite enthusiastic over the plan, but that other places they are not as yet very well informed on the law, and in such places they are liable to be suspicious and afraid that they are going to be beaten.

Some counties in the state have been under the state highway system for several years past, and where this is the case they are the most enthusiastic, and were the first to take advantage of the state aid plan. At the road school held in Madison recently there were a number of these commissioners present and they gave some valuable pointers concerning difficulties they had overcome in their respective localities.

It might be well to state here that the work done under the present system is performed under the supervision of the state, and when the county commissioner tackles a piece of road he is at liberty to call on one of the state commissioners for advice, who will come right to the premises and give the county commissioner the advantage of counsel from a man who has been trained in the business and who has been up against all the difficulties that are to be encountered in the various kinds of soil to be found in the state. Also, that the county commissioner has no claim on his job, and that if the commission finds at any time that he is not performing his work properly or is not competent to handle it in the manner it should be, they can discharge him. It will be seen by this that the county commissioner is obliged to make good or else step out and allow somebody else to fill the position.

Fold those dear hands, O so gently On that clam and quiet breast. Close those eyes with loving fingers. Our dear father is now at rest.

As the evening light was dying. On that land of endless day. To that world of pain and sorrow. To that land of endless day.

Let his memory be a blessing. Like a lamp to guide you on. Helping you to be as patient. As the dear one who has gone. God through all those years was near him. Helping his cross to bear.

Giving him loving promise. Of the crown he soon would wear. And remember how the father. He who doeth all things here. Said, come weary, heavy laden. Come, and I will give you rest.

MEXICAN TOWN IS EASILY CAPTURED BY THE VASQUIS- TA REBELS.

TA REBELS.

Recently there has been much discussion in educational circles of the need of men teachers in the higher grades, and some effort has been made to attract them to the work, without any appreciable results. There must be something about the calling of the teacher—other than its pecuniary rewards or its range of opportunities—that is inadequate to attract and hold men who might take up this calling as a life work. The average man teacher uses his position as a makeshift, a stepping-stone and means of livelihood while he studies for the law, the medical or some other profession, says the St. Paul Pioneer Press. Usually the man teacher leaves at the earliest opportunity for more flattering and lucrative fields of endeavor. It would seem that teaching would be the most enjoyable work for the student of books and of human nature, but the fact remains that men as a rule do not regard it. It must be admitted that the profession of teaching does not hold the financial attractions of men that are offered in other professions. The years of preparation required, the constant study necessary, the investment in books and other expenses make a severe drain on the teacher's income, which is small at best. If it be true that in a real demand for more men teachers, the chances are that the demand will be supplied when the compensation is made commensurate with the services rendered.

The statistics of the five departments of New York show that at least 25 per cent of the fires in that city are caused by the careless use of matches and of lighted cigars and cigarettes. It is not true that this awful risk to others by careless smokers should be taken account of by the law? It is not a trivial matter. The tossing aside of lighted matches and cigar butts without seeing where they land should be as much of a penal offense as bomb-throwing or incendiarism. A careless cigarette, as far as known, caused the great fire in Baltimore, one of the biggest in the history of that city and wholly preventable. A careless match caused the recent fire in New York, with its loss of valuable life and much loss of property also wholly preventable. The careless user of a spark of fire is an enemy of the public welfare and ought to be treated as such. We are as yet primitive in our outlook upon vital facts.

A very pleasant prediction has been made by a college sociologist that the United States is due for war in 1930 and that this nation will be in the wrong, as probably by reason of its wealth and importance, it will have become an international bully. He bases this assertion on the evidence of history. But to offset this are the facts that the direct rule of the people is becoming more and more the national ideal of government, and that with the people as a whole vitally in control, the power sentiment will be stronger than ever. It is upon the masses, not the classes, that the horrors of war chiefly fall, and the element of self-interest will then be more engaged in the preservation of peace than ever before in the history of the world. In the meantime, potential academic wars need not seriously affect the national peace of mind.

Professor von Wassermann has informed the Berlin Medical Society of amazingly successful experience in treating cancerous ulcers in men with injections of a preparation containing eosin, tellurium and selenium. He says that after the fourth injection cancerous affections almost entirely disappeared, and at the end of ten days some of the animals were entirely cured. But he is not certain, he says, that similar results would be attainable in the case of human beings.

A Harvard professor says that all voice is symptomatic of a disease which he calls Amerianditis and has something to do with nerves. He is probably right, for there is never a divorce unless one party gets on the nerves of the other.

INDIANS ARE ROBBED

LUMBER CONCERN CHARGED WITH DESPOILING CHIPPEWAS.

Nullification of State Statute Makes Possible Gigantic Acquisition of Lumber.

Washington, Jan. 1.—Disclosure of the neglect and despoliation of the Chipewas Indians on the White Earth reservation in Minnesota are to be laid before the house of representatives as the result of an investigation conducted by Representative Graham of Illinois, chairman of the committee on expenditures in the interior department. Under the provisions of various acts passed by congress in the last ten years thousands of the Indians on this reservation were given timber lands of extraordinary value and then induced to sell the timber to powerful lumber companies operating in Minnesota. The lumber concern was even enabled to carry out their gigantic acquisition of timber by a federal law nullifying a Minnesota statute. Chairman Graham and Congressman Henry George of New York returned here from the reservation, where they have been taking evidence in the inquiry for nearly a month. They reported the Indians to be in a deplorable condition. The committee will hear additional witnesses in Washington and then make a report to the house.

Christians Are in Danger

Massacre Threatened as Result of Shelling of Beirut by Italians.

Beirut, Syria.—A strong anti-Christian feeling is prevalent here as an aftermath of the Italian bombardment, which wrecked the city and killed 60 innocent inhabitants and it is feared on every side that a massacre of Christians may result. The native movement against the followers of Christ has been fanned to fever heat by the declaration of the Turks that the town was shelled with a view to preventing this action to the end that international intervention might bring a speedy termination to the Tripolitan struggle that is costing Italy millions of dollars.

All American residents are reported to be in considerable alarm, and the atmosphere has been considerably cleared by the announcement that all Italians of every class would be expelled from Turkey and that the Dardanelles would be closed to shipping.

PERILS MANY LAWS

DECISION OF ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT KNOCKS OUT STATE MEASURES.

Will Call Extra Session

Bill Appropriating $50,000 for University of Illinois Is Declared Illegal Because It Was Not Printed Before Final Passage.

Springfield, Ill.—The state supreme court has handed down a decision which affects the validity of many of the most important laws and appropriation bills passed by the legislature during the last forty years.

The court held an appropriation of $50,000 for the medical department of the University of Illinois to be unconstitutional on the ground that the bill in its final form was not printed before its passage by the legislature.

The $50,000 item was inserted in the conference committee report and rushed through the legislature in the closing hours of the 1911 session.

At each session for many years bills have been passed without fulfilling the constitutional requirement that a bill and all its amendments must be printed before final passage.

As a result an unprecedented situation exists.

Governor Deneen probably will convene the legislature in special session to rectify the mistakes of past years before other measures, whose validity is in doubt, are attacked in the courts.

Many important bills are affected by the decision of the court, including the following: Omnibus appropriation bill, making appropriation for the expenses of the state government for the ensuing two years; omnibus bill making appropriation for the seven-year state charitable institutions; senatorial appropriation under which general assembly members have been elected for last ten years; Cook county civil service bill; bill providing for payment into the state treasury of all fees collected by state officers; municipal civil service bill; Chicago parks civil service bill; Chicago police pension fund bill; state game commission bill; appropriation for sites for state armories and armory buildings; appropriation for new buildings at state fair grounds.

BLACKMAILERS TRY TO WRECK WHOLE CHICAGO BLOCK.

Blizzard Extinguishes Fuse to Explosive Found in Basement of Big Grocery Establishment.

Chicago.—Ten pounds of dynamite combined to form one of the most powerful bombs ever discovered in Chicago, enough explosive to blow up a city block or duplicate the Los Angeles Times disaster, was found concealed in the basement of Galesburg's wholesale grocery house, 323 South avenue. A fuse and fulminating cap had been attached, and the fuse had been lighted. Flying snow is believed to have caught the spark of the fuse and extinguished it, thus preventing not only the murder that was apparently intended, but also the far more extensive loss of life that would have been the inevitable result of the explosion.

CUMMINS HITS AT TRUSTS

Introduces Bill to Strengthen Greatly the Government's Anti-Trust Powers.

Washington.—Senator Cummins of Iowa introduced a bill to strengthen greatly the government's anti-trust powers. The measure provides what is asserted would be the first authority to limit the size of corporations and to guard against unfair or ruinous competition through precontracted underselling.

The purpose in limiting corporations, it is set forth, is not to prevent operation of business in a big way with economy of production, but to limit them in the beginning in such a way as to leave room at least for others of substantially the same magnitude, between which healthy competition may be preserved.

RAIL CHIEFS IN CONFERENCE

Meet to Discuss Demands of Engineers for Increase in Wages.

New York.—Executive officials representing all of the large railroad systems in the eastern territory met in this city to exchange views on the demands made by the locomotive engineers for higher wages. The engineers are making a movement for a wage advance of 15 per cent. Every road east of Chicago, north of the Chesapeake & Ohio and south of the Canadian border, is affected.

The railroads, it is understood, are inclined to look upon the demands of the engineers as hardly justified by existing conditions.

Blank Petitions Are Mailed.

Senator John J. Blaine of Boscombe, state manager of the La Follette campaign committee, sent out blank petitions for district delegates to the Republican national convention, also blank for delegates at large and for presidential nomination preference. These three sets are expected to be returned, the one set petitioning that the names of the men recently chosen at progressive Republican conferences be placed upon the ballot at the spring election, the other that the four delegates at large recently agreed upon be likewise placed upon the ballot for candidates and the third that the name of Robert M. La Follette be placed upon the ballot as a candidate for the Republican nomination for president. The blanks were sent to progressive Republican workers in various parts of the state and the responses are expected to be prompt. Only 1,000 names will be required on the presidential preference petition and the same number on the petitions for delegates at large. Attorney W. W. Reynolds of Madison is acting as secretary for the committee.

Have Dickens Exhibit.

At the state historical museum in Madison an exhibit of Dickensiana is being made in honor of the centenary of the great English novelist, Charles Dickens. The collection is probably the largest ever assembled at an exhibit in Wisconsin, and fills three large cases and several display screens. Included in it are a number of engravings of portraits taken of Dickens between the years 1830 and 1877; copies of some of the first English and American editions of his books; copies of Dickens' sales and exhibition catalogues; engravings of drawings by Hablot K. Brown (Phiz) and George Cruikshank, illustrators of his works; Dickens' memorial fund stamps; old copies of the "Punch" and other English magazines; and other English buildings made famous in his works, copies of old playbills, autographs and several memorials of his life visits to America.

During the month of March the museum expects to make a special exhibit illustrating the history of journalism in America. The newspapers to be exhibited on this occasion will be drawn from the very extensive and valuable collection of the State Historical society, included in the exhibit will be pictures of former newspaper men of prominence, and pictures of early printing establishments, presses and other printing room furniture, etc.

First Annual Co-Ed "County Fair."

The first annual co-ed "county fair" held at Lathrop hall, Madison, was the most interesting fun-making and instructive enterprises ever undertaken by the women of the university. The fair covered every branch of feminine activity in the university. The agricultural school was represented by one horse, a cow, a sheep, a pig, a goose, a duck, a chicken and a pigeon. One of the features of the fair was the collection of old pictures. Instead of a set price of ten cents for each show, the shows were ruled and prices ranged from four to eleven cents.

College Heads Score State Law.

A denunciation of the law passed by the legislature at its last session authorizing the expansion of the normal schools into junior colleges, a suggestion to check college activities such as athletics in order to get more efficient scholarship, and the statement that the high schools and preparatory schools are sending their graduates away to colleges and universities, woefully lacking in knowledge, were some of the features of the fifth annual session of the College Presidents' Association in Madison.

President W. O. Carroll of Carroll college, Waukegan, delivered an address on "The Relation of the Colleges to the Normal Schools, and the Effect of the Law Authorizing the Expansion of the Normal Schools into Junior Colleges." "The normal schools were created primarily as 'teaching agencies,'" said President Carroll, "under the new law they are placed on the same basis practically as the colleges, and that was not their original function. There is a big question whether or not the law isn't putting the normal schools in competition with the state colleges."

Decides Waupaca Controversy.

The state railroad commission, acting as arbitrator in the controversy of the city of Waupaca and the Waupaca Electric Light and Railway company, ruled that the contract price for installed street lamps, installed by the company in violation of contract, must be paid by the city. Old style lamps were to be used, for which the city agreed to pay $5.36 each for a period of ten years. In 1904 the company began the substitution of the new style lamps, and its action was protested and bills refused.

Many Get State Positions.

The state civil service commission announces the following appointments to state positions:

First University Exhibit.

Again the University of Wisconsin steps in the front with a new idea, a novelty in university undertakings, yet a matter of history to the commercial world, this time with the first university exposition ever held by any American institution of learning.

The exhibit will be held April 15 and 20 in the gymnasium and the quad, new athletic annex, both of which buildings afford over 20,000 square feet of exhibition space. Fully seventy departments of the university will be present in this great exhibit of every kind of activity in which the university participates.

Lawrence Washington, senior, Old Edge, has been appointed manager of the enterprise, which will be held under the joint auspices of the Students' union and faculty assistants. University Manager H. C. Bumpus, former director of the New York Museum of Natural History, Prof. Steven W. Gilman, C. K. Lath and K. H. Hatch have been appointed the faculty committee. Over 300 senior students have been placed on department committees and the preparation of exhibits for each department.

Every college, every school and every department in the university will be represented with some sort of exhibit or other in the show. Practically every line of university activity both in school and outside of the institution will have its exhibit.

Among the interesting plans already taking form is that of the agricultural school. A model dairy, model farm, and other agricultural institutions will be conducted by students of the college. Regularly advertised milking times will be announced to show both city and country people how cows are milked by machine. Cows, horses, sheep, swine and chickens will be housed in modern quarters and under sanitary conditions.

The bacteriology department will have a novel showing. Plagues will be exposed for ten minutes on street corners in Madison, Milwaukee and Chicago, and then will be inspected through a microscope to show the hundreds of germs about in the air. A student with germ-hand hands will shake hands with 50 people and each one will have his hands exposed through a microscope to exhibit how germs may be carried in this manner. Tuberculosis and hydrophobia germs will also be viewed through a microscope.

Meeting Ends in Janesville.

The Wisconsin Library association closed their annual convention in Janesville. Addresses at the opening session were given by Miss L. E. Sterns and Miss Mary Hazelton of the state library school. Dramatic readings of the poems of William Butler Yeats were given by Mr. and Mrs. Rubin G. Thwaites of the State Historical society, Madison, and the program was concluded with musical numbers.

Mrs. Gundrun Thorne, Thomson of Chicago gave the principal address at the closing session. Mrs. Thomson is an eminent authority on children's literature.

Badger Teams Have Good Year.

The University of Wisconsin is at the present time enjoying one of the most successful years in its athletic history. The football eleven, under a new coach, was the runner-up to the western championship, and went up to the Minnesota game—the second to the last on the schedule—without having its goal line crossed. At the same time Coach Wilson's cross country team, with two veterans running, defeated the other conference teams and took second in the intercollegiate cross country race at Iowa City.

To Revoke Wire Charter.

Secretary of State Prosser gave notice that on March 18 he will revoke the state license of the Western Union Telegraph company in accordance with a request of Walter L. Houser of Mondovi. The warrant for this procedure is the alleged action of the company in removing a state case in which Houser was plaintiff, from a state to a federal court in violation of the state statute. The secretary was advised to follow the action of the state attorney general, Russell Jackson.

The following list of patents recently granted to Wisconsin inventors is reported: Thomas S. Allen, Milwaukee, commutator construction for dynamo-electric machines; Cyril J. Atkinson, Watertown, vaporizer for gas producers; Columbus C. Carpenter, Milwaukee, scaffolding attachment for roofs of buildings; Herbert L. Drake, Medford, bark removing machine; Edward W. Goodrich, Oshkosh, apparatus for the manufacture of packing pads; Edward Heldt, Merrill, rotary engine.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Janeyville in an address before the Rock County Bar association, Stephen S. Gregory, president of the American Bar association, recently made some radical changes in the criminal law of the state under capital punishment where the plea of insanity is brought into play as a defense for crime. Mr. Gregory had as his subject the topic "Insanity as a Defense in a Criminal Action." He took up the recent English law and severely criticized it. In this respect, he said, as a defense of the mind and should not be as a defense except where the patient is not a sane man but he does not know right from wrong.

Janeyville was arrested by Police Inspectors Ralph Walker of Madison and John Bird of Milwaukee, who charge the Janeyville physician with fraudulent use of the mails. The specific complaint on which the warrant of Davidson was issued was filed on February 7 by J. J. Davidson of Milwaukee. It is a charge that David has been duped into a series of people throughout the country through his fraudulent advertisement of a medicine power of supposed cures. They made no effort to force two cases or two each registers in the place, and it is declared by the police that the robbery was committed by some one who managed to conceal himself in the saloon and probably saw the bartender put the money in the drawer.

Shopley At a farmer's meeting, consisting of many of the most influential and prosperous farmers of Rock county, a resolution was unanimously adopted declaring that the agricultural interests are not sufficiently represented on the board of agriculture, and recommending Judge C. D. Brown, held, for the appointment to the member-at-large vacancy soon to occur.

To Remain in Receptive Mood Until Republican Convention Has Expressed Its Preference—Stands for Genuine Rule of the People.

Wisconsin Harbor Cities Oppose Chicago Project.

WOULD CAUSE A HUGE LOSS

Delegation Sent to Washington Gives Reasons Why the State of Illinois Should Not Be Allowed Additional Water from Lake Michigan.

Washington, Feb. 26.—The city of Milwaukee, together with other cities of Wisconsin, threw down the gauntlet to commissioners of the sanitary district of Chicago and declared through representatives that it would resist to the utmost further diversion of waters of Lake Michigan for drainage and power purposes for the Illinois city.

The protest on the part of Wisconsin cities was presented to Secretary of War Simmons at the hearing on the application of the Illinois drainage commissioners for a further diversion of water through the canal. William George Bruce, who was selected by members of the Milwaukee delegation to present the protest, said in pointing out the damage that would accrue to local river beds and dockage if the natural level of Lake Michigan was reduced six inches, said "dredging that will have to be done will involve a cost of $150,000 in order to maintain a proper water depth of our rivers. We protest against diversion of lake waters at Chicago for other sanitary or power purposes, because other means for sewage disposal or for generating power may be obtained. The use of the lake for navigation purposes is guaranteed to us by the ordinance of 1887 and Wisconsin means to protect its rights under that ordinance."

Representative Davidson, speaking in behalf of other lake cities of Wisconsin, contended that a reduction of six inches in the lake's natural levels would involve loss extending into millions of dollars. Wisconsin harbor cities, he declared, would resist to the end further diversion of lake waters for sanitary or power purposes.

Plans for Next State Fair Considered at a Meeting of the Board of Agriculture.

New York, Feb. 26.—"I will accept the nomination for president if it is tendered to me and I will adhere to this decision until the convention has expressed its preference." Theodore Roosevelt in these words broke his silence of months, and formally declared himself in the race for the republican nomination for the presidency. The colonel's statement was issued from the Outlook office in the form of a reply to a petition from eight western governors, dated February 10, in which they implored him to express his willingness to accept the nomination. Follows his reply:

Believes in Rule of People.

"New York, Feb. 24, 1912.

"Gentlemen:—I deeply appreciate your letter and I realize to the full the heavy responsibility it puts upon me, expressing, as it does, the carefully considered conviction of the men elected by popular vote to stand as the heads of government in their several states. I absolutely agree with you that this matter is not one to be decided with any reference to the personal preferences or interests of any man, but purely from the standpoint of the interests of the people as a whole. I will accept the nomination for president if it is tendered to me

"I don't quite understand why the Hindoos kidnapped you, Lieutenant," added Fitch tentatively.

Britz smiled.

"More details," Britz replied. "First, Grisolvid did not smuggle the diamond into Miss Holcomb's room. That little trick was pulled off by All. He was the only one who could have done it, and his reason for wanting to throw suspicion on the young woman is plain. He was in the house to get the necklace and he also wanted to make a sure getaway. Therefore, he figured, if the jewels should be missed before he was able to get them out of the house, it would help his chances of escape to have suspicion thrown on the secretary. The diamond that was found among her things did not belong to the collarette, but its size and luster matched any of a dozen of the stones in that case of magnificent setting, so that all of us took it for granted it was Mrs. Missioner's property."

"Very good," parried the chief.

"How about the other points?"

"It needs no vivid imagination," said Britz, "to picture Curtis Grisolvid employing a young woman to take the drawings to the French manufacturers and telling her to introduce herself as Elvira Holcomb, or by any other name he desired."

"At least," nodded reluctantly, Fitch approvingly.

"As for old Martin's possession of Sands' card," continued the lieutenant, "I see no explanation about that except that Grisolvid handed it to him. There seems to be a streak of malicious mischief in our club friend. As a side exploit in pulling off a big crime, he would enjoy making trouble for another—especially for a man he had reason to fear as a rival, which was the case with Sands. It may be even hoped to cast suspicion permanently on the millionaire, though that seems hardly possible. Even when Sands acted so mysteriously in regard to that letter he recovered from the Hindoos when he did not make me suspect he had stolen the diamonds, the strongest suspicion I had was that he might be shielding the thief, and that didn't last long."

"And your own little adventure?" asked the chief of detectives with a trace of malice.

COURT PRACTICE DOWN SOUTH

Virginia Juries Not Charged—Georgia Divorce Cases Tried Twice if Plaintiff Wins.

"It's queer the way the laws in some of the southern states differ from our laws up here," said Col. Allan T. Brinsmade, just back from a long trip through the south.

"In Norfolk, Va., I sat one day recently beside a federal judge when a criminal case was being tried. The charge was, I think, robbing the United States mails. At 5 p. m. the judge turned aside and speaking very quietly said:

"The jury will now retire."

"A recess, I suppose," I observed.

"No," he said, "the jury is about to retire to consider the evidence and give its verdict."

"But you did not charge the jury," I remarked in a puzzled way.

"We do not charge the jury in this jurisdiction," he replied.

"In Savannah a day or two later I was in a court room where a divorce case was being tried before a jury. The wife, who was the plaintiff, was given the verdict."

"So she gets her divorce," I remarked to a lawyer friend.

"No, not now," he replied. "In this state when in a divorce case the verdict goes to the plaintiff the case must be tried again at the next term of court. If the plaintiff wins again the decree is granted."

"However, at the first trial the defendant wins, the case is all over. Queer law that, but the judge said it was working well—that after the first verdict in favor of the plaintiff a reconciliation was often brought about."

M. Paul Bourget has been lecturing on Theophile Gautier and expressing how hard he struggled may be judged from his account books, which have been published by Baron Spoelberch de Lovenjoul. He was both art critic and dramatic critic of La Presse; he was overworked, and his average earnings of "scale rates" amounted to about $260 a year.

His attitude toward literature consequently became cynical. "Masterpieces!" he once exclaimed. "I do not recognize masterpieces. I recognize nothing except copy at so much the line."

"Chicago, Feb. 10, 1912.

"We, the undersigned republican governors assembled for the purpose of considering what will best insure the continuation of the republican party as a useful agency of good government, declare it our belief, after a careful investigation of the facts, that a large majority of the republican voters of the country favor your nomination and a large majority of the people favor your election, as the next president of the United States.

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with a scream from Dorothy March in the opera box of Mrs. Missioner's wealthy widow. It is disclosed when Mrs. Missioner's necklace is stolen, that the diamonds in it are not what is supposed to be the celebrated Maharane diamond, but a cheap imitation. An expert later pronounces all the stones in the necklace forgeries.

The diamonds are found in the room of Elvira Holcomb, confidential companion of Mrs. Missioner. She is arrested notwithstanding Mrs. Missioner's belief in her innocence. The cooperation of Dr. Fitch, Elvira's fiancé, in running the case, and the return of the diamonds to Mrs. Missioner, is the end of the story.

Yorkers don't believe in throwing temptation in one another's way—anyhow, not at any risk to themselves.

"Your powers of deduction are truly marvelous," said Manning with a short laugh, in which Britz thought he heard a faint note of mockery.

"Now, let's don't do any kidding, Chief," Britz rejoined with just a shade of acid in his voice. "This is a pretty serious case, and I've been up a few nights without any too much sleep. I'm not on the witness stand now, recollect, and I don't feel as if I'd got to parcel out my words when I'm talking to friends."

"I'm talking to friends," was the least little lift of his eyebrows as he uttered the last word.

Manning laughed again—apologetically this time, and the lieutenant, once more unruffled, continued:

"So Grisolvid had to make sketches and diagrams of the widow's necklace. Even that couldn't have been easy, for I guess he had to use his pencil when Mrs. Missioner wasn't in the room. It isn't likely she gave him many opportunities of being alone with the jewels she prized above all the others in her collection. You see, when her husband gave her that necklace and told her about the Maharane diamond, he made up a pretty little fairy story that probably gave the big stone much greater value in her eyes than it really had."

"I should hardly know the truth," women," said Britz solemnly, "are funny. They are about the funniest things in this little old world of ours—particularly when it comes to jewels and gowns, with the jewels leading by a city block."

Fitch, in his capacity as a lover, became somewhat reticent under the doctor's cynical sunning up of the sex, and relieved himself with the remark:

"If women are any funnier than men, I'd like you to show me how. Your experience is all very well, lieutenant, but I've seen them in their little white coats in hospitals, both kinds; and I have seen them on the operating table, and I can tell you the woman has yet to be born that can do as many fool stunts as the average man!"

After this burst of romantic frankness he subsided.

"Well, we won't quarrel about the sex, doctor," said Britz, "though I must say I don't like to hear you getting off those raffish sentiments. Anyway, it's safe to assume Mrs. Missioner didn't let Curtis Grisolvid have time to drape that necklace of hers on an art model when he started in to sketch it. He made those drawings by his and starts, and it must have taken him a good many weeks to finish them."

"Unless he drew the necklace from memory," suggested Manning.

"That sounds too easy," Britz returned. "I'd have to have a memory like a daylight film to carry all those different sizes and shapes of those jewels in his mind—to say nothing of their fire. The fact is, the drawings he made were not only accurate to the smallest degree of outline, but the tuster of

Abstracts of Title

An Abstract of Title recently completed on a piece of valuable property transferred within the past two years disclosed the following condition. That the present owner holds his title to the property on a deed signed by one person who was honestly believed to be the owner.

The Abstract disclosed the fact that through the provisions of a Will there were four other persons who still owned four fifths of the property and the one who thought he was the owner had, in fact, title to only a one fifth interest.

Deeds are now being obtained to perfect this title.

One of the nicest things in the show line that our people have had the pleasure of listening to of late were the Juvenile Bostonians, that held forth at Daly's Theatre on Saturday and Sunday evenings. There was good singing and plenty of comedy, and the entire show was one of the most pleasing ones that has been seen here. The only drawback to the performances was the fact that there were very small audiences in attendance to the productions.

The concert given last Wednesday evening by the Grand Rapids band was the best ever rendered in this city by the local organization. However, the public showed so little appreciation of the boys efforts that it is not at all probable that they will go to the trouble of getting up anything more of the kind very soon again. The concert was put on because a large number of our people asked for it, stating that they were disappointed that the band had not given the regular series of concerts this winter.

Men in this locality should see to it that things around home do not become too "domestic," but stir up the animals occasionally if they want their better half to continue loving them.

LOST—Sunday evening a mesh bag containing a handkerchief and some change. Was either dropped in Ideal theatre or on way to the bridge. Return to this office for reward.

Max Steinberg, who has been laid up for the past three months with pleurisy, is now improving, but it will be some time before he will be able to resume his work at the store.

John Rasmussen, the cement paver, has purchased a Batch Concrete mixer to be used in his work the coming season. The machine is one of the latest and best of its kind on the market and is the same kind used by the U. S. government on their work. The machine cost $600 and will be operated by a gasoline engine.

FOR SALE—One five room cottage, three blocks from main street on west side. Inquire at this office.

Ed Lynch left on Monday for Milwaukee to look after his lumber business there. Mr. Lynch expects to leave the latter part of the week for Montello, near which place his farm is located and where he expects to spend a few days looking after business.

Andrew Bissig, who has been out on the road for the American Fruit Exchange, returned to this city on Saturday. It is Mr. Bissig's intention to take a couple of weeks vacation, after which he will go out to the Bissig Bros. marsh west of the city and assist in the spring work there.

Mrs. M. B. Milne received a letter from Mrs. H. O. Willmott, formerly of Biron, but now living at Greenfield, Mass. She reports the family well, and in good spirits over their return to the old home, but complains of the high cost of the necessities of life. As examples, she quotes beef steak at 33 cents the pound, butter 44, and eggs 55 the dozen. Perhaps Grand Rapids prices are not so bad for all.

FOR SALE—One nine room house, with modern improvements, three blocks from main street on west side. Inquire at this office.

Beaten at Wausau.

The highschool basketball team from this city went to Wausau on Friday and played the highschool team from there that evening, the game resulting in a victory for the Wausau boys by a score of 33 to 14.

In speaking of the game the Wausau Record-Herald says:

"To the spectators it might have seemed that a higher score against the opponents ought to have been made. This fact is explained thus: It was thought that the boys on the home team were getting stale, and in order to prevent this in their playing on Friday night, they practiced only once during the week. The lack of practice in throwing baskets undoubtedly accounts for their ill luck in putting the ball in the basket last night, when their shots were so frequent. At their usual rate, they would easily have piled the score much higher than it was last evening."

"The game started out with fast playing, after a few minutes of which Wausau proceeded to score several baskets. Following this, both teams had a number of good shots, neither putting the ball in the basket. Then Grand Rapids scored a field basket and a few foul throws, between times Wausau putting in the ball."

"The first half ended in favor of Wausau, 16 to 9."

"In the second half both teams went into the game with more vigor and played a harder game throughout the remainder of the time. After about ten minutes fast play with a field and foul basket for Wausau, the game was delayed a minute for a slight knock. The game was renewed and a little fumbling followed but was quickly checked and Wausau kept the ball for some time, Johnson and Turner each making a basket. For the next few minutes neither team scored but by clever work of the forwards and close guarding by Wausau men, the local team managed to keep the ball in their hands. At this point Brown was put in and the remaining time was a period of fast playing, time being called when the score stood 33 to 14, with Wausau victorious over their old rivals, Grand Rapids."

City Treasurer Sam Church transacted business in Wausau on Tuesday.

The Baptist church after a thorough trial of an early Sunday school hour, have decided to change back to the old order, and hereafter the Sunday program will be as follows: Pleading 10:30; Sunday School, 11:30; B. Y. P. U., 6:45; Evening praise and preaching service, 7:45.

BRITZ of THE QUARTERS

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with a scream from Dorothy March in the upper box of Mrs. Missioner's dressing room. It is a scream of alarm, for Mrs. Missioner, a wealthy widow, is alone in the room. She is looking at a diamond necklace which she has just received from a man who has just been arrested. The man is a young man named Britz, who is a member of the "Hindoo" gang. The necklace is a valuable one, and it is the only one of its kind in the city. The man who has just been arrested is a man named Britz, who is a member of the "Hindoo" gang. The necklace is a valuable one, and it is the only one of its kind in the city.

"The man Gordon has run down," said the lieutenant, "were the hardest to catch. I call them the second batch of thieves because they are the fellows who stole Mrs. Missioner's jewels long after the stones were stolen from her."

"And who may they be?" Manning persisted.

"They are the dark men—the Hindoos whose connection with the case complicated it much more than was comfortable, and who gave further proof of their intransigent dispositions by making the doctor here and me so uncomfortable just before we came back to Headquarters."

"You mean they are the men who robbed Mrs. Missioner of her jewels?"

"No, the men who stole Mrs. Missioner's jewels after she was robbed of them."

"They robbed the thieves, then?"

"Not thieves—thief," said Britz.

"There was only one artist in the first job."

"What's his name?" the Chief questioned again.

"His name?" returned the detective unhesitatingly. "Oh, I haven't said it was a 'he'."

Even Fitch, though he had worked intimately with the sleuth in the latter part of the hunt for the jewels, was astonished. Manning concealed his surprise.

"Well, I suppose you've got the goods on him—or her?"

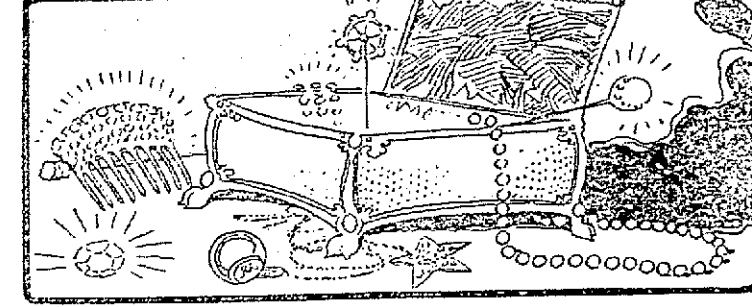

"I have and I haven't," the detective answered. "While only one person stole the diamonds, there's been a whole troop of potential thieves after the stones. They've been working on every one of them, with the natural result that they played unconsciously into the hands of the one of them trusted."

Fitch and Manning eyed each other quizzically. Britz had worked hard on the case and had succeeded in getting success seemed impossible. If he wished to indulge in a slightly enigmatical preamble, surely it was not asking too much to humor him.

Britz gnawed a black cigar, unlighted, and whistled about two or three times before he took up the thread of his recital again.

"It's a long story," he resumed. "It took a lot of piecing to put it together, but it's plain as day as a piece of music when all the cut-outs fit. In the first place, Griswold planned to get the jewels a long time ago—a couple of years, I fancy. He didn't content himself with mere planning. He did a lot of work while he was waiting for his opportunity."

"He knew the value of the Missioner necklace, of course, especially the value of the big Maharane diamond that was its central stone. As nearly as I can make out his scheme, he hoped to steal the collar and dispose of it in the market before it should be missed by Mrs. Missioner. The only way to do that, of course, was to substitute an imitation for the genuine article. Naturally, too, the imitation had to be made without Mrs. Missioner's knowledge, and the man he meant to have make it had to have either the original as a copy or a very accurate drawing. It was beyond all possibility that Griswold could get the necklace to have his possession long enough to have a bogus collar made. Mrs. Missioner, in spite of her many millions, and like all other women of wealth, guarded her jewels closely. She may trust her government bonds and other negotiable securities to attorneys or her own eyes. None of us knows just how much she thought of Griswold; but the chances are that, even if she had been engaged to him, she wouldn't have let him have possession of the Maharane necklace for any length of time. My experience is that these rich New work for Mr. Griswold, and from all I've heard a fine job he made of it, too."

"Crazy, is he?" asked Manning.

"Mad as they make 'em," Britz replied, "but, as the doctor says, harmless. He couldn't have made so good an imitation had he not believed he was manufacturing a genuine stone. That's his delusion, you understand—thinks he's making diamonds."

"Well," said the Chief after another pause. "How did Griswold turn the trick when it came to the show-down?"

A faint smile flickered an instant about Britz's lips, then disappeared.

"He never got a chance to turn the trick," the detective replied. "For more than a year now, he's been casting covetous eyes on the same paste stones he had manufactured."

By a tremendous effort Fitch succeeded in subduing his excitement, and looking at his hands behind his head, he waited with what patience he could for the rest of the detective's story. Manning seemed to turn to ice.

"Griswold has been in bad financially for over two years," Britz continued. "He's been doing stunts with the books of the Inequity Trust company. At my request, the directors have had experts on the books for a couple of weeks, and they've got as pretty a case against Mr. Griswold as ever you saw. He wanted that necklace in order to get enough money to square his accounts."

"Now comes the strangest part of the case," the detective smiled as he made ready to fire the verbal bomb. "The most surprised man in the world, on the night that Mrs. Missioner discovered her jewels were more paste, was Curtis Griswold."

Britz watched the effect of his words on his hearers. They shifted nervously in their seats as if impatient of the detective's pause.

"When did the Hindoos steal the jewels and where did they find them?" asked Manning.

"About an hour, or a little more, before I made a try for them myself," said Britz. "They nabbed them in the apartment of Mrs. Millicent Delaroché, in the Hotel Renaissance."

"And who, if you don't mind taking me into your confidence, is Mrs. Millicent Delaroché?" the Chief inquired.

"Mrs. Millicent Delaroché," said the detective crisply, "thinks she is the future Mrs. Curtis Griswold. But as far as Mrs. Griswold is concerned, she may remain Mrs. Delaroché for the rest of her natural life. In other words, Griswold promised to marry her, and then got very busy in an attempt to marry Mrs. Missioner. He doesn't know yet, of course, that it will be a very long time before he has a chance to marry anybody. Neither does Mrs. Delaroché know how she has been fooled by the chubman. When she does know—which I think will be some time today—I think you'll see some fun."

Fitch, to get the upper hand of his nervousness, tapped his eyeglasses with a metal knuckle, and then, looking at his hands behind his head, he waited with what patience he could for the rest of the detective's story. Manning, too, was absorbed in what Britz had to tell. Both of his hearers, therefore, were momentarily disappointed when Britz, instead of going ahead with his story, asked that Donnelly and Carson be called apart, long enough for one of them to arrest Griswold, and the other to bring Mrs. Delaroché to Headquarters.

"I don't want to make things too unpleasant for these bright young men," Britz said sarcastically; "but I do want to give myself the satisfaction of having them nab the two persons they should have arrested in less than a week after the theft of Mrs. Missioner's jewels was discovered."

Manning felt he had no choice save to comply. He wasn't exactly pleased by the insistence of his lieutenant's request; but when Britz, at a nod from him, pressed a push button and an attendant appeared in the doorway, Chief Manning ordered the bluecoat to ask Donnelly and Carson to report to him in the lieutenant's room at once.

"Right here," Britz proceeded, "is where an interesting side feature of the mystery comes in. Griswold would have probably been more alert if he had known that men ten times as adroit as he, and a hundred times more unscrupulous, had journeyed half around the world to get one of those very gems he was preparing to steal from the woman he hoped to marry. I don't know exactly what's at the bottom of the interest these Hindoos have in the great Maharane diamond, but I do know they're willing to get pretty close to the electric chair to get it. I understand it was not really bought from the wife of an Indian prince, as Missioner told his wife it was. My best information is that it came from a Hindoo temple. You know those savages set great store by their idols. At any rate, from a half-dozen to a dozen Indians of various degrees came here from Calcutta some time ago and camped on the trail of the Maharane diamond. They played a waiting game for weeks, and then, one day, they and, apparently, they were on the point of making a grand effort to get the stone when the head of this organization happened to be in the box next to Mrs. Missioner at the Metropolitan Opera House on the night when the necklace turned out to be a fake. He then learned that the original diamonds were not in the widow's keeping any longer.

"Griswold also was in the Missioner box that night," you know, and I went there. What I looked out with the doctor on the sidewalk, as the lookout, I did a little burglary stunt that would have landed the jewels if the Hindoos had not got there ahead of me. In some way or other, those fellows learned about the acquaintance between Griswold and the Delaroché lady about the same time I did, or perhaps a little earlier. One of them got into her apartment by the fire escape route and sneaked the jewels from under her pillow. What's more, he contented himself with the diamonds. The jewels, and didn't even take the casket they were in. The jewel case was still under her pillow when I got there, and it wasn't until after the lady, under the impression the gems were in the case, gave herself away more or less, that I found the little box was empty. I saw the handkerchief the dark-skinned crackman had dropped in his hurry. That sent us hot-footed to the Swami's house."

When Britz had sketched the history of the Missioner case, Manning and Fitch looked at him admiringly. Both had heard the story in the past, but they were so different before. Then the Chief, though he realized Britz had solved the mystery, could not refrain from picking flaws.

"You have not explained fully," he said, "how Griswold contrived to smuggle the small diamond into Miss Holcomb's room."

"For how the old curiosity dealer

reasonably sure of a getaway as easily after a murder as after a robbery."

"You must have been reading about Al Babu and the Forty Thieves, Britz," said Manning with another harsh laugh. "This sounds altogether too much like the Arabian Nights to be the goods."

"Well, there weren't as many as forty of the thieves, and the Al Babu case wasn't as honest a stunt. I'm giving it to you straight, Chief. I haven't worked day and night on this proposition for nothing. You'll find it just as I'm telling it to you, and if you'll suspend judgment until I get through, I'll deliver the goods all right."

"I think," remarked Fitch to Manning, "we shall find that Lieutenant Britz comes pretty near knowing what he is talking about. I've seen him work on this case, and I know something of the facts he has discovered. If you have ever studied the ways of Orientals you'll be surprised at nothing they do. They look life from altogether a different angle. Life is about the cheapest thing in life to them."

"Very good," said Manning. "I'm willing to be convinced, but it seems hard to believe that a woman worth a hundred millions could live for months with death hanging over her head in her own household, and yet know nothing about it. What's the use of being a multi-millionaire if you're no safer than in an eighteen-dollar flat? For my part, I don't take much stock in your Hindoos."

"You'll take a lot of stock in them before the morning is over," Chief, if you say so," Britz retorted. "I'm going to show you not only the Hindoos in the act of attempting to get away, but I'll turn up the goods in their possession. They have the diamond now, but I'll have both there and the diamond in a very few hours."

"I believe you," Fitch chimed in. "You see, Chief," he explained to Manning, "this lieutenant of yours has made the capture of the Hindoos more or less of a personal matter."

A choppy laugh from the detective interrupted the physician.

"Yes," he agreed, "I don't mind telling you that I'm almost as eager to get those fellows as I am to recover the widow's jewels. They got just a little bit too gay with me for their own good." He flushed slightly as he recalled how utterly he had been at the mercy of the Hindoos when he lay like a holiday turkey on the floor of that bare room in the unoccupied apartment.

"The Hindoos," said Britz, "went through the apartments of Sands and Griswold with what Sam Weller would call a double-million-magnifying microscope. They didn't leave a postage stamp unsearched. They looked into every hole and corner, rummaged every drawer, and turned every place inside out. I caught 'em in two of them, anyway—in Sands' room, and they're now in the West Thirtieth Street Station. They must have gone through Griswold's apartment first, for it was there, I guess, they found this note from Millicent to 'Charles dear,' and it was this note that gave me a line on how brother Griswold stood with the lady of the Hotel Renaissance. I knew Griswold was in the habit of visiting that hotel, but I didn't know whom he went there to see. I felt pretty certain when I got the note that it came from the Hindoos. The Hindoos, and I got Rawson to send the bunch out on the hunt so that I could make certain I'd made no mistake."

"One of the men reported there was a Mme. Delaroché at the Renaissance. That looked good enough to me. I went there. What I looked out with the doctor on the sidewalk, as the lookout, I did a little burglary stunt that would have landed the jewels if the Hindoos had not got there ahead of me. In some way or other, those fellows learned about the acquaintance between Griswold and the Delaroché lady about the same time I did, or perhaps a little earlier. One of them got into her apartment by the fire escape route and sneaked the jewels from under her pillow. What's more, he contented himself with the diamonds. The jewels, and didn't even take the casket they were in. The jewel case was still under her pillow when I got there, and it wasn't until after the lady, under the impression the gems were in the case, gave herself away more or less, that I found the little box was empty. I saw the handkerchief the dark-skinned crackman had dropped in his hurry. That sent us hot-footed to the Swami's house."

When Britz had sketched the history of the Missioner case, Manning and Fitch looked at him admiringly. Both had heard the story in the past, but they were so different before. Then the Chief, though he realized Britz had solved the mystery, could not refrain from picking flaws.

"You have not explained fully," he said, "how Griswold contrived to smuggle the small diamond into Miss Holcomb's room."

"For how the old curiosity dealer

reasonably sure of a getaway as easily after a murder as after a robbery."

"You must have been reading about Al Babu and the Forty Thieves, Britz," said Manning with another harsh laugh. "This sounds altogether too much like the Arabian Nights to be the goods."

"Well, there weren't as many as forty of the thieves, and the Al Babu case wasn't as honest a stunt. I'm giving it to you straight, Chief. I haven't worked day and night on this proposition for nothing. You'll find it just as I'm telling it to you, and if you'll suspend judgment until I get through, I'll deliver the goods all right."

"I think," remarked Fitch to Manning, "we shall find that Lieutenant Britz comes pretty near knowing what he is talking about. I've seen him work on this case, and I know something of the facts he has discovered. If you have ever studied the ways of Orientals you'll be surprised at nothing they do. They look life from altogether a different angle. Life is about the cheapest thing in life to them."

"Very good," said Manning. "I'm willing to be convinced, but it seems hard to believe that a woman worth a hundred millions could live for months with death hanging over her head in her own household, and yet know nothing about it. What's the use of being a multi-millionaire if you're no safer than in an eighteen-dollar flat? For my part, I don't take much stock in your Hindoos."

"You'll take a lot of stock in them before the morning is over," Chief, if you say so," Britz retorted. "I'm going to show you not only the Hindoos in the act of attempting to get away, but I'll turn up the goods in their possession. They have the diamond now, but I'll have both there and the diamond in a very few hours."

"I believe you," Fitch chimed in. "You see, Chief," he explained to Manning, "this lieutenant of yours has made the capture of the Hindoos more or less of a personal matter."

A choppy laugh from the detective interrupted the physician.

"Yes," he agreed, "I don't mind telling you that I'm almost as eager to get those fellows as I am to recover the widow's jewels. They got just a little bit too gay with me for their own good." He flushed slightly as he recalled how utterly he had been at the mercy of the Hindoos when he lay like a holiday turkey on the floor of that bare room in the unoccupied apartment.

"The Hindoos," said Britz, "went through the apartments of Sands and Griswold with what Sam Weller would call a double-million-magnifying microscope. They didn't leave a postage stamp unsearched. They looked into every hole and corner, rummaged every drawer, and turned every place inside out. I caught 'em in two of them, anyway—in Sands' room, and they're now in the West Thirtieth Street Station. They must have gone through Griswold's apartment first, for it was there, I guess, they found this note from Millicent to 'Charles dear,' and it was this note that gave me a line on how brother Griswold stood with the lady of the Hotel Renaissance. I knew Griswold was in the habit of visiting that hotel, but I didn't know whom he went there to see. I felt pretty certain when I got the note that it came from the Hindoos. The Hindoos, and I got Rawson to send the bunch out on the hunt so that I could make certain I'd made no mistake."

"One of the men reported there was a Mme. Delaroché at the Renaissance. That looked good enough to me. I went there. What I looked out with the doctor on the sidewalk, as the lookout, I did a little burglary stunt that would have landed the jewels if the Hindoos had not got there ahead of me. work for Mr. Griswold, and from all I've heard a fine job he made of it, too."

"Crazy, is he?" asked Manning.

"Mad as they make 'em," Britz replied, "but, as the doctor says, harmless. He couldn't have made so good an imitation had he not believed he was manufacturing a genuine stone. That's his delusion, you understand—thinks he's making diamonds."

"Well," said the Chief after another pause. "How did Griswold turn the trick when it came to the show-down?"

A faint smile flickered an instant about Britz's lips, then disappeared.

"He never got a chance to turn the trick," the detective replied. "For more than a year now, he's been casting covetous eyes on the same paste stones he had manufactured."

By a tremendous effort Fitch succeeded in subduing his excitement, and looking at his hands behind his head, he waited with what patience he could for the rest of the detective's story. Manning seemed to turn to ice.

"Griswold has been in bad financially for over two years," Britz continued. "He's been doing stunts with the books of the Inequity Trust company. At my request, the directors have had experts on the books for a couple of weeks, and they've got as pretty a case against Mr. Griswold as ever you saw. He wanted that necklace in order to get enough money to square his accounts."

"Now comes the strangest part of the case," the detective smiled as he made ready to fire the verbal bomb. "The most surprised man in the world, on the night that Mrs. Missioner discovered her jewels were more paste, was Curtis Griswold."

Britz watched the effect of his words on his hearers. They shifted nervously in their seats as if impatient of the detective's pause.

"When did the Hindoos steal the jewels and where did they find them?" asked Manning.

"About an hour, or a little more, before I made a try for them myself," said Britz. "They nabbed them in the apartment of Mrs. Millicent Delaroché, in the Hotel Renaissance."

"And who, if you don't mind taking me into your confidence, is Mrs. Millicent Delaroché?" the Chief inquired.

"Mrs. Millicent Delaroché," said the detective crisply, "thinks she is the future Mrs. Curtis Griswold. But as far as Mrs. Griswold is concerned, she may remain Mrs. Delaroché for the rest of her natural life. In other words, Griswold promised to marry her, and then got very busy in an attempt to marry Mrs. Missioner. He doesn't know yet, of course, that it will be a very long time before he has a chance to marry anybody. Neither does Mrs. Delaroché know how she has been fooled by the chubman. When she does know—which I think will be some time today—I think you'll see some fun."

Fitch, to get the upper hand of his nervousness, tapped his eyeglasses with a metal knuckle, and then, looking at his hands behind his head, he waited with what patience he could for the rest of the detective's story. Manning, too, was absorbed in what Britz had to tell. Both of his hearers, therefore, were momentarily disappointed when Britz, instead of going ahead with his story, asked that Donnelly and Carson be called apart, long enough for one of them to arrest Griswold, and the other to bring Mrs. Delaroché to Headquarters.

"I don't want to make things too unpleasant for these bright young men," Britz said sarcastically; "but I do want to give myself the satisfaction of having them nab the two persons they should have arrested in less than a week after the theft of Mrs. Missioner's jewels was discovered."

Manning felt he had no choice save to comply. He wasn't exactly pleased by the insistence of his lieutenant's request; but when Britz, at a nod from him, pressed a push button and an attendant appeared in the doorway, Chief Manning ordered the bluecoat to ask Donnelly and Carson to report to him in the lieutenant's room at once.

"Right here," Britz proceeded, "is where an interesting side feature of the mystery comes in. Griswold would have probably been more alert if he had known that men ten times as adroit as he, and a hundred times more unscrupulous, had journeyed half around the world to get one of those very gems he was preparing to steal from the

THE QUEST OF GENTLE HAZARD

Being the Adventures in Love and Chivalry of Lord Richard Jocelyn
By H. M. EGBERT

A Casual Champion

Lord Jocelyn yawned. He had chosen an unattractive locality for this relaxation, being, in fact, upon the curb at the northeast corner of Forty-second street and Broadway at eight o'clock in the evening, and in passing to give vent to his feelings, he narrowly escaped being run down by a taxicab which whizzed past, the wheel not five inches away. But the truth is he was not bored. He had not met with an adventure worth speaking of for several days and had decided to return home to his apartments on Madison avenue, play a game of solitaire and go to bed.

He had already arrived at this admirable decision when his attention was attracted toward a young woman of remarkable beauty who was hurrying past. Instantly he turned around, of course, with any design of addressing her or in any way molesting her, but to follow her with his eyes until she rounded the corner and was lost to view among the crowds of upper Broadway. For beauty was to Lord Jocelyn a lodestar that attracted him irresistibly, and the beauty of this particular young woman was as that of a peach, let us say, among a basketful of nectarines.

Just then an incident occurred which changed all his intentions and resolutions. For, as she was about to round the corner, a flashingly attired man, whom Lord Jocelyn had observed hurrying after her, caught up with her and plunging himself in her path made some remark to her.

Lord Jocelyn felt his blood tingle. He saw the girl start back, saw the fellow pursue her with the evident intention of commencing a flirtation, and strode through the crowd in hot anger, an angel of avenging chivalry. A dozen steps he was at her side. "In this fellow molesting you?" he asked, doffing his hat.

The girl raised her eyes to his appealingly, Lord Jocelyn swung round upon his heel and, as the first sneering words broke from the man's mouth, he let drive his fist with his full force and caught him between the eyes. The man fell like a log and, striking his head upon the curb, lay as though stunned. Before Lord Jocelyn could utter his protest through the crowd that instantly assembled, a policeman was at his side. He looked at Jocelyn's evening attire, then at the rough clothing of the fellow, whose consciousness was slowly returning.

"No need to explain, sir; I saw the whole business," he said. "Gilding and comic," he added, addressing the street loafer. "Station house for you."

"Do you want me to come with you as a witness?" asked Jocelyn.

"No need of that, sir," answered the policeman. "I'll take your name, and that of the lady's, and you can be at the Jefferson Market court at ten tomorrow morning."

"My name's Jocelyn," said the involuntary hero of the episode, adding his address here in the episode, adding his address to the policeman. "And this lady is—"

"Miss Murray—Clara Murray, 462 West Ninety-first street," said the lady promptly.

The policeman noted down these facts in his pocketbook, keeping one eye warily upon the ruffian, who was now rising to his feet and looking round him with a dazed expression. He snapped the book shut and jerked him to his feet. Then the man seemed suddenly to realize his predicament.

"Lennie go!" he shouted, struggling in his captor's grasp. "I gotta speak to the lady. I will speak to her—"

He fought himself free and, with a blow of surprising force, sent the policeman reeling backward. The latter, recovering his balance, drew his club and brought it down with his full force upon the man's head. For the second time he dropped.

Meanwhile, catching the young woman by the arm, Lord Jocelyn forced his way through the crowd to a street car, which they boarded.

"You must let me see you to your home," he insisted. "Ninety-first street is not far out of my way, Miss Murray."

She turned on him a look of intense scrutiny. Then she faltered:

"I live at Ninety-first street, as you address to the policeman, but I live in Fifty-first street. And here's where we got off," she continued, a moment later.

And, when they were on terra firma again, she added:

"And here is where we part, Mr.—Jocelyn?"

Lord Jocelyn bowed. "But I must at least insist on being permitted to accompany you to your door," he protested. "Really the streets are not safe for you on account of your attractions," he was going to add, but decided that the acquaintance was too short to permit of such an expression. She hesitated for an instant. "Well, come along, then," she said, finally, and led the way along a deserted street to a small, old-fashioned house. Drawing a key from her wrist bag she unlocked the door.

"Why, it's all dark," she said, peering into the vestibule. "Ain't I home yet? Mister Jocelyn, I don't want to send you away empty-handed, you like a glass of wine before you go?"

"I should, immensely," answered Lord Jocelyn, wondering who Alf might be, and what relationship he bore to Miss Murray.

"Then you shall have one," the girl answered, leading the way into a dark parlor and lighting a gas jet. She produced wine and glasses from a cupboard, and filled them. "Here's to—"

"To our meeting at the police court tomorrow morning," answered Lord Jocelyn, draining his glass and looking round at the well-furnished but rather gloomy room.

The next moment they heard the sound of a key in the lock of the front door. Its effect upon the girl was electrical. She set down her glass with trembling hands, and looked round her in terror. "O, what shall I do? What will you say?" she gasped. "It's Alf and he'll kill you. He'll kill you. Mr. Jocelyn, quick, hide! Anywhere!"

But before Lord Jocelyn could even look round for a refuge a man, heavily built, and having unmistakably the appearance of a prize-fighter, came striding into the room. At the sight of Jocelyn his brow contracted into a scowl and he clenched his fists menacingly.

"Who—what the devil—?" he began.

"It's Jake, Jake McGee," cried the girl desperately, looking at Jocelyn with terror.

The man's brow cleared as if by magic. He strode forward and clenched his hands in a grip that nearly crushed them.

"I'm glad as thunder to meet you, Mr. McGee," he said. "How did you find the house?"

"He got the address from Barney," said the girl promptly. "He just came in a second before you did."

"Last night," said the young woman promptly.

"You know we've changed the meeting place," said the man, turning to Jocelyn. "It's terrible work, but I think we've outwitted the cops for once. But if you hadn't struck Barney, why I don't know how we'd have got word to you. The inspector swears it won't be pulled off—but he doesn't know we've got Alf's stable on Third Street street."

"O, that's where it is?" asked Jocelyn, feeling his way to the dark.

"Sure. Didn't Barney tell you? He must have been crazy. You won't feel strange, McGee, seeing you'll have to introduce yourself?"

"I suppose there was no other way," Lord Jocelyn answered.

"Well, let's have a whisky and talk things over," said the man, bringing out more glasses and a bottle of Scotch. "Sit down. You stay here, Lizzie; you're in on this deal. Where did you get that English accent, friend?"

"I've just come back from a six months' visit to London," said Jocelyn, watching the girl intently for some cue.

"The other fellow told him in the ribs," said Jocelyn, and came to business.

"You've bin back a whole year now and you've had time to get rid of it. Honest, McGee, you mean business, don't you? I'd hate like thunder to hurt you, and I'm in the pink of form," he added, crowning at his huge wrist.

"I certainly do mean business," answered Lord Jocelyn.

"Then don't try any monkey games, or it'll be the worse for you. It's a couple of thousand apiece, share and share alike, and you're to drop in the third."

"So I understand," answered Lord Jocelyn, still without a glimmer of understanding.

"Then here's luck to both of us," answered the man, becoming suddenly hilarious. "Barney said I was a fool to do it—said I could whip you easy and take the whole amount, and from the looks of you I guess he's right; but Alf Orme never went back on a deal yet and he ain't going to begin. Here's how!" And he drained his glass, an example which Jocelyn followed. Then he rose to his feet.

"I'll have to be going," he said, apprehensive that Orme might attempt to detain him. But to his surprise the latter agreed.

"Best thing you can do," he answered. "Turn in and get a good night's sleep. And remember, Jake, eight-thirty to the minute at the stable and go in through the back of the saloon on the other side of the block."

He shook him by the hand, but this time Lord Jocelyn was prepared and returned the grip hard enough to make Alf Orme wince. As he passed out of the door the woman followed him.

"You'll be there?" she whispered in an agitated voice. "You won't go back on me?"

"Not for my wish," answered Lord Jocelyn, more mystified than ever. "What is it?" he asked.

"A gambling game?" she repeated scornfully. "No, a prize fight. And you're Jake McGee and you're going to meet Alf Orme for a purse of four thousand dollars."

Lord Jocelyn felt decidedly foolish at that moment.

"You don't know I'm not McGee?" he faltered.

"Not on your life. It's your first visit to town, and you were unknown until you beat the Barney Kid in Chicago last month and made a reputation. Nobody here has seen you, and the thing's got to be kept hush as the grave because the police have got grasping him by the arm. You won't throw me down?"

"Heaven's sakes, if Alf learns you aren't McGee he'll kill me sure."

"But what'll I do if the real McGee turns up?"

"He may not learn that the place has been changed. We've got to take chances. If he comes, bluff it out. At the worst you'll clear me all right if he does show up. Alf'll think I was deceived like him. But you've got to be there. Promise me."

"I promise," answered Jocelyn solemnly, and he passed out of the house and took a taxicab home. Then, since his mind was in a whirl, and he had to meet Alf Orme upon the morrow, he went to bed and was soon wrapped in dreams.

He awoke at nine o'clock, but for several moments he could not quite recall what had happened on the preceding evening. Then as memory slowly came back to him he sat on the edge of his couch and groaned.

"First I've got to give evidence in the police court," he muttered. "And then I've got to fight for four thousand dollars, and run the risk of being half killed as a 'faker,' even if I don't give myself away." He felt the menace of his arms and took several imaginary punches at the air. At college Lord Jocelyn had been a famous boxer; he was not really afraid of the battle, though his chances of winning seemed infinitesimal. Something else was troubling him, but for a minute he could not discover what it was. Then the recollection came to him, and he groaned out loud.

"And she's married," he cried, in a voice that was half a sob. "She's Alf Orme's wife."

"There came a tap at the door and the face of Talbot, his servant, appeared, peering round the jamb. "Did you call, sir?" he asked. "I thought I heard a sound."

"No—yes," Lord Jocelyn answered. "Talbot, what would you do if you made an ass of yourself for a girl and then found that she was somebody else's wife?"

"I'd clear out, sir," answered Talbot.

"There was a young woman as lived down Eighth way—"

"That your young woman, Talbot, I can't clear out. The police have my address."

"Then, sir, I'd see the thing through," said Talbot sagely.

"You're right, by George," his master answered. "Talbot, my dressing gown. And look alive; I've got to be bathed and dressed in 30 minutes."

"Which you shall be, sir," Talbot replied—and proved his contention: that the young woman was not at the police court. The case came on at eleven, and her aggressor, now very much the victim, came into the dock a miserable object, his head swathed in bandages. Briefly, Lord Jocelyn gave his evidence, which corroborated that of the policeman.

"Where's the young woman in the case?" the magistrate asked.

"Can't be found, your honor," the envelope. Inside he found a scrawled "Elizabeth Orme."

"Forgive me for writing," it said, "but I remembered the address you gave the policeman last night, and I implore you, as the gentleman I know you are, not to turn me down. Alf was drinking last night and grew suspicious. He doubted you were McGee. He hasn't trained, and if you'll only be brave you can put up a good appearance before he knocks you out in the third."

Lord Jocelyn tore the letter to pieces and laughed.

"I wouldn't go down in the third if I were standing up to Johnson himself," he said; and with the words, a new spirit entered his breast. He would fight, not merely to keep up appearances, but to conquer.

Punctually at the time appointed he made his appearance at the saloon door, and pushing aside the janitor without a word passed through a maze of passages into an anteroom, the office of the stable, in which he found a number of men clustered together. Among them was Alf Orme, in fighting attire, reclining in a chair, while his second rubbed his limbs. When he saw Jocelyn he bounded out of his chair in delight.

"Here's Jake, boys," he shouted. "Good old Jake, I knew you'd make it. Mr. Barney Jones—Mr. McGee. Barney's your second and you'll find him Alf. Come, get your togs off."

Lord Jocelyn stripped and assumed his fighting gear, while Barney looked at him in approval.

"You'll last three rounds," he said, approvingly. "Tell you what, boy, I shouldn't be surprised if you couldn't whip him if you wanted to."

"Hello, Jake, me boy," put in a man in a silk hat, evidently the master of the ceremonies, who had just entered. "Glad to meet you," he said, grasping his hand warmly. "Say, Jake, you don't look as if you'd done much work with them milks," he added, looking with disapproval at Jocelyn's well-maintained hands.

"He'll do all right. How's the house?"

"Fine," said the manager. "Full up and no standing room. Ready, boys? Time, gentlemen—in with you."

Jocelyn arose lightly out of his chair and followed Orme into a large circular stable, already hazy with tobacco smoke, through which he could himself standing over a prostrate man, while the crowd howled and yelled.

"Sur, that was a good punch all right," Barney whispered as he faced him. "You drop the time—remember! He'll hit you in the jaw and you take the count—see?"

Jocelyn laughed at the prediction, for he knew now that he was going to win. Orme came up puffing like a motor and there was no force in his blows. As he drove for Jocelyn's chin the latter fell upon him with the force of a cyclone. Thud, thud, thud, the blows fell right and left upon his antagonist. Orme staggered back to the ropes, hunching there a moment, facing Jocelyn with an expression of astonishment and injury, and slowly rose to receive a blow upon the point of the jaw delivered with all the victor's strength. Alf Orme fell backward and lay with closed eyes like one dead.

The manager bent over him. "One—two—three," he counted, and Orme lay still. "Four—five—six—seven," he continued. Orme's second was dancing round him, screaming at him to rise. Slowly Orme's eyes opened. He stared up at the faces vacantly, and the audience shouted its wild.

"Eight," said the manager. "Nine." There was an almost imperceptible pause. "Ten. I declare Jake McGee the winner."

And Jocelyn, standing in the center of the ring, was suddenly overwhelmed by his admirers, who burst through the ropes and crowded round him. "Good boy, Jake, bully for you," they shouted. "You got him good. Three cheers for Jake McGee."

Jocelyn forced his way through to the dressing room, sponged himself and began to put on his clothes. His second seemed to have deserted him. But, as he was completing his toilet, the manager came up, looking black as thunder, and flung a purse into Lord Jocelyn's lap. "Here's your money," he growled. "If you got what was coming to you—"

Lord Jocelyn looked at him involuntarily. "Anything wrong?" he asked.

"Anything wrong?" the manager echoed. "O, no. I'm only ruined, that's all, and serves me right. Ask Barney here."

Barney, white as a sheet, came up to him and shook his fist in his face. "You damned cur," he howled, almost weeping with rage. "To sell us all out

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF AMERICANS GOING TO CANADA

Although Western Canada suffered, as did many other portions of the west, from untoward conditions, which turned one of the most promising crops ever seen in that country, into but little more than an average yield of all grains, there is left in the farmers' hands, a big margin of profit. Of course, the growing of grain was more fortunate enough to harvest and market a big yield, and with the prices that were secured made handsome returns. From wheat, oats, barley and flax marketed to the 1st of January, 1912, there was a gross revenue of $73,384,000. The cattle, hogs, poultry and dairy proceeds brought this up to $101,620,000 or 21 million dollars in excess of 1910. There was still in the farmers' hands at that time about 35 million bushels of wheat worth at least another sixty-five million dollars, besides the 160 million bushels of oats to say nothing of barley and flax, which would run into several million of dollars.

There is a great rush of settlers to occupy the vacant lands throughout Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The reports from the Government show that during the past year upwards of 131,000 Americans crossed the border into Canada. A great many of these took up farms, over ten thousand having homesteaded, in fact the records show that every state in the Union contributed. A larger number not caring to go so far away as the homesteading area, have purchased lands at from fifteen dollars an acre to twenty-five dollars an acre. The prospects for a good crop for 1912 are as satisfactory as for many years. The land has had sufficient moisture and with a reasonably early spring, it is safe to predict a record crop.

Those who have not had the latest literature sent out by the Government, agents should send to the one nearest, and secure a copy.

Truth Alone Not Sufficient.

Just consider for a moment how ridiculous it would be for a lawyer (to attempt to win a case on his client's bare assertion as to the facts. The facts as stated, might be true, but truth alone is not sufficient either in law or in advertising—there must be proof positive or at least evidence (reasons) sufficiently good to convince the jury or the judge that the assertions made are probably true.—John E. Kennedy in Printers' Ink.

Certainly Not.

Naturalist on the Slums

Dr. Hornaday Gives Some Sound Advice to Young Women Tourists From the West.

A short time ago a party of young women tourists from the west visited the New York Zoological Park and called on Dr. Hornaday, to whom they had a letter of introduction. The director personally conducted their inspection of the park, answered their ratting-fire of questions and placed at their disposal as far as possible the vast fund of information on topics in his line. As they were about to leave he surprised them by giving them some advice in a different direction and of a nature that visitors to New York do not usually receive.

"Now, girls," he said, "of course you wish to see everything in New York, but do not visit the slums. It will not add one thing to your education. I have lived in New York eleven years, and if there are any slums here I do not know where they are nor do I wish to know unless I could do some good there. The casual visitor that comes to New York for a mere curiosity would prompt anyone to seek such places for the purpose of looking at degradation, and you can save your time, to better advantage, if there are so many important and attractive things to be seen in New York that you cannot afford to waste your time on unworthy sights. Try to see the pleasant and valuable things and leave New York clean to its own slums—hoping they may be soon."

It has been reported since that several mothers and fathers are grateful to the director for his unexpected advice.

Spoke With Charles Lamb.

Dr. Augustus Jessopp, a friend of George Meredith, and probably the only man now alive who has spoken with Charles Lamb, celebrated his eighty-eighth birthday recently. His meeting with Lamb came about this way:

As a little boy he was walking one day in a field with the father when a small man in a white coat and a black hat, with a white stick, came and stranger, patted the boy's head as he conversed with Mr. Jessopp, senior. "Do you know who that was?" the father asked when the little man was gone. "That was Charles Lamb."

A Wise and Humane Man

We saw a certain old something last week that was worthy of more than passing notice.

This man brought a load of potatoes to the city, and when he reached the city, he found the potatoes were so rotten that he had to throw them away.

While doing the thing in this way made a little more work for the man, it gave the horses a show for their life, as they did not have to kill him themselves digging a heavily loaded sleigh across the bridge and then the city streets while the sleigh always disappears before it does in the country.

N. J. Robinson expects to build a fine chicken house this spring.

Tomorrow morning they will not be here. Do not put too much confidence in what you hear from others when you vote for the man that is capable of filling the office.

SOUTH RUDOLPH

Rudolph seems to be one of our leading towns in most everything, especially in the making of roads as they have bought rock from August Boats, John Connor and N. J. Warren.

The stone was hauled down as far as Emil Stogio's clearing where the stone crusher will be placed by the first of May. This stone will be crushed and hauled on the roads and rolled down into the ground which will make a fine place of road and the roads are now fixed that way it will be fixed for good. The time has come when the money which is voted for the roads is being put to some good use. Before money has been raised to put on various roads and still no good has been received yet. And a good share of our road taxes has been paid by the tax payers hauling sand into below and covering up corduroys and in a year or so the sand had gone out of sight. If the money which has been wasted in such a manner had been used in building good roads such as they are preparing to build near the Stogio farm, we would by this time have some good roads. As far as making the taxes higher they will not be so much higher that we will notice it, as the county and state and towns and all of the big business places, such as the drug stores and all places of business in each town help.

Monitt Donalston helped Peter Krause butcher some fine fat hogs last Tuesday afternoon.

John Lundgren has purchased a fine new spring tractor this winter.

Willie Kater has been hauling basswood bolts to Rudolph where he receives a better price than as he hauled them to town.

The farmers here are hauling rock from N. J. Warren's place down on Stogio's farm where the stone crusher will be set in the spring.

Joe Domske is now busy building a milk and power house.

John Plesche has purchased a new house from one of the local farmers. It is a fine young house. It matches his others in color and size. We understand he paid about $200.00 for the house.

John Schiltz has sold his farm in South Rudolph. Mr. Schiltz has been out up for some time past with rheumatism of the back and legs so that he could only walk a little by the aid of two crutches.

Laddie Johnson and his brother Chas were around here building their schoolhouse and friends goodbye as they expect to leave for Roseville, Minn. They have been employed at the Brown paper mill and now they will go west for spring work. They have been there before and say that wages are from $25.00 to $32.00 per month.

Leslie Bros started up their saw mill on Monday. They have about 100,000 feet of nice logs to cut for the farmers.

W. H. Donalston of Grand Rapids, a former resident of this town, has been quite ill last week with heart trouble.

Paul March will hold an auction on March 15th. Mr. March intends to move to Grand Rapids to live.

Moses Sharkey spent several days in Janesville last week looking over 21 tracts of land owned by the late Mr. Sharkey of Waupun.

Mr. and Mrs. Albie Donalston leave this week for Marquette where Mr. Donalston will have charge of a dredge.

A surprise party was held at the Bert Olson residence last Thursday the occasion being Mr. Olson's birthday. A few intimate friends and relatives were present and a very pleasant time was had.

Evil of Idleness. Work develops all the good there is in a man; idleness all the evil. Work sharpens all his faculties and makes him thrifty; idleness makes him lazy and a spendthrift. Work surrounds a man with those whose habits are industrious and honest; in such society a weak man develops strength, and a strong man is made stronger. Idleness, on the other hand, is apt to throw a man into the company of men whose object in life is usually the pursuit of unwholesome and demoralizing diversions.—Darius Ogden Mills.

FEWER U. S. CONVICTS

British System for Reforming Army Deserters to Be Tried.

Criminals to Be Sent to Alcatraz While Men Guilty of Purely Military Offenses Are to Go to Fort Leavenworth Prison.

Washington.—A sweeping change in military prison methods was instituted by order of the War Department. All of the short term prisoners of Alcatraz Island, San Francisco, have been ordered transferred to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

All of the long term prisoners in the latter institution, about 270, to be transferred to Alcatraz, which will thus be made the place of confinement for the criminal element, while Leavenworth will be the place of detention of soldiers guilty of purely military offenses. To save transportation expenses, a second criminal jail is created at Fort Jay, Governor's Island, N. Y.

The effects of these changes is to carry out the recently developed British system of treating deserters and other soldiers guilty of breaches of discipline as subject to reformatory influences and of segregating them from the absolutely criminal and vicious class.

In a report, giving the result of a "secret inspection" by him of the "detention barracks" of the British army, the Inspector General of the United States Army, Gen. E. A. Garlington, said:

"It took five or six years for the detention system in England to establish itself, but it apparently has saved many men from trouble and from degenerating into hardened cases. They certainly endeavor in this system to apply humane common sense in the treatment of men in trouble. This gives an opportunity for the men to recover their self-respect and respond to any 'order' which, under the system of person life and its demoralizing environment, cannot be expected to survive."

In his recent report General Wood, chief of staff, recommended that the

NIAGARA HERO GRASPING ROPE

HERE is an actual photograph of the fatal Niagara Falls ice bridge tragedy. It shows young Barrett Heacock of Cleveland, O., in the act of grasping the rope dropped from the cantilever bridge after he had made a heroic attempt to rescue Mrs. Stanton. Heacock was drawn part of the way up to the bridge, but his strength failed and he fell back and perished in the torrent.

The British system has been given a trial in the United States. Under the present system in the United States, a soldier convicted of desertion becomes a "convict" and loses not only opportunity again to serve in the army but his citizenship as well.

Under the British system the deserter when apprehended, or men found guilty of other purely military offenses, are sent to the detention barracks. When they are restored to duty with their regiments, they are found to be undesirable for further service they are discharged.

passed in France about the same time. In the fifteenth century the custom was legalized in Genoa and Florence.

In Scotland, in later years, and perhaps at present, the women have the privilege at many private dances of choosing their own partners in a leap year. Men stand about the walls of the room, like veritable wall flowers, waiting "to be asked." They look pictures of sheepish anxiety until they are courted to and led forth to the dance by the fair one. For "asking" is supposed to accompany the "leap" that a proposal trembles on the lips of the fair one.

Wife Spanked Her Rival

Mrs. Jennie Russ of Wilkesbarre, Pa., Says She Chastised Miss Sue Phillips.

Wilkesbarre, Pa.—Mrs. Jennie Russ of this city, who lost her suit to her husband found guilty of non-support, charged that the husband, Christian Russ of this city, spent much time and money in entertaining Miss Sue Phillips, and that in consequence she deserted her.

She admitted that recently she had decoyed Miss Phillips into the private room of a hotel and had spanked her soundly. The husband said that after a quarrel with his wife she had gone to his bank and drawn out all his money, so that he could not give her any. Judge Strauss on hearing this dismissed the case.

This indifference to other details is to blame for many gifts being laid away as quite useless to those receiving them. The possessor of a rather long, slender neck will look almost ridiculous in a collar that would be too high entirely for the chubby person with a short, rounded neck.

It is especially when making em- bodiered stock collars that the clue to the best effect is one easy to remember. For the long, slender neck the lower edge of the collar should be plainly rounded and the upper edge curved up into a pointed effect under each ear.

For a short, plump person, on the contrary, the upper edge of the collar should be plain all around, except at the very middle of the front, where it should curve slightly downward, and the lower edge, followed the same general lines, should curve down still more pronouncedly, with a medallion or tassel at the center, to emphasize the "dip." This gives the effect of lengthening the neck, and the collar can be almost as elaborately embroidered as the higher one for the tall person.

FASHION'S DECREE IN HAT DECORATION FOR THIS SEASON.

Late Winter and Early Spring Millinery Shows Ribbon and Silk Bows in Abundance—Many Fanciful Forms Seen.

It is surely becoming the fashion to rattle the decorative finish on hats to one material, but this must be used in abundance. For instance, on late winter and early spring millinery pretty touch and an ornament of metal can often be used to advantage. The changeable taffetas are most often seen in green and blue, green and red, blue and gold and good combinations of bright colors and gray. These silks make the long, wispy-like forms that trim the moderately small turbans and hats of mere braid which are shown everywhere with much success.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

BLOUSE IS COMING BACK

Old and Useful Friend Returns After Eclipse Caused by Rage for "Little Frock."

Foremost among the revivals of the winter will be the return to favor of our old friend the blouse, which suffered a period of almost total eclipse during the summer, when the all-conquering "little frock" swept everything before it. It comes back absolutely in its earliest and most elementary form. The shirt waist was the shape in which the blouse was first made to us, if one excludes the old Garibaldi, and this year it will regain all its trim simplicity.

A variety of pretty designs is already to be seen. Tucks are the favorite, indeed, almost the only form of decoration, occasionally set in groups or arranged in varying widths, but most of the new blouses are made with half-inch tucks at regular intervals across the front and back. Plain sleeves to the wrist, finished by a straight cuff, not too tight fitting, and either a tucked or a stock collar, and a little breast pocket, into which a dainty handkerchief can be tucked, as well as buttons holes cut on the bias, will be features of the blouses in question.

For morning wear the leading materials will be plain and fancy chailis, muslin, velvets, washing silks, silk poplin, and the pretty and useful cotton poplin, better known as poplin linen, which washes to perfection and is substantial enough to be very comfortable wear on a chilly autumn day. It is produced practically in all colors, and has the evening merit of being very inexpensive. Striped chailis will be very fashionable as a blouse fabric and looks charmingly dainty made with a stock collar and a little tie to match the stripes.

Even silk and satin blouses will be made with the utmost simplicity. If for evening wear, the sleeves will reach only just below the elbow, and will be finished with a band of lace insertion piped at both edges with the silk. Kimonos will still be worn, but often without a vestige of embroidery, the neck being finished with a narrow edging of the material, bordering a tiny tulle, with a high collar.

Violet Scent. So many inquiries have come to hand respecting a new way of perfuming rooms that one ventures to describe yet another and more simple novel which is being used for this purpose, of making rooms fresh and fragrant. This is known as the violet hanger, which consists of a group of dainty little wicker baskets filled with lit, and are strung together on long hanging ribbons which can be hung in front of a window or door or any place where they catch the breeze, so that the sweet perfume emitted through the wicker work is wafted about the room.

PIERROT RUCHE

Question of Outline is of as Great Importance as is Size of the Neck Band.

Too often when one is planning a trifle of embroidered neckwear for a gift the neck size is all that the maker thinks it necessary to consider. If her friend wears a No. 13 collar or one larger size she lets it go at that and makes the collar of any shape that suits her inventive fancy. This indifference to other details is to blame for many gifts being laid away as quite useless to those receiving them. The possessor of a rather long, slender neck will look almost ridiculous in a collar that would be too high entirely for the chubby person with a short, rounded neck.

It is especially when making em- bodiered stock collars that the clue to the best effect is one easy to remember. For the long, slender neck the lower edge of the collar should be plainly rounded and the upper edge curved up into a pointed effect under each ear.

draw-string shirts are run in there will be a narrow trim finishing. This opening is the only portion of the bag which need be handled when looking for a special waist, for one glance into it will reveal the character of its contents. Any blouse which is ever so slightly starched can be placed almost safely in one of these bags, but one that is of net or voile must be braced with tissue paper, as otherwise the materials will fall into creases and become shapeless.

Children's Dancing Frocks. Wool embroidery is very much in evidence on some of the dainty little dancing frocks for children. The frocks are made of net or chiffon, and until one really sees a dress of this description it is difficult to realize just how effective the popular worsted trimmings may be arranged. Some of the frocks have bands of wool flower work about the bottom of the skirt and on the girdle, and one dress of white chiffon had a blue tulle effect, bordered with worsted flowers resembling roses and forget-me-nots.

Ban on Worsteds Flowers. Trimmings of worsted flowers which threatened to invade our shores and deck our ready made hats have been severely censured.

TO KEEP SHIRTWAISTS CLEAN

Individual Bag for Each Waist Solves Problem That Often Perplexes Feminine Mind.

How to keep the freshly laundered shirtwaist from getting mussed and slightly soiled while it awaits its turn to be worn is one of the perplexities of the woman whose quarters are far too small to accommodate her belongings in a box or a drawer. The entire stock must usually be gone over each time that one of the garments is needed, but if a bag is provided for each one of the garments, the fingers need not come into actual contact with any of them until the time comes for wearing it. A half-yard of white cambric, folded once widthwise, makes a bag sufficiently large to accommodate the fluffiest of lingerie blouses, provided that the receptacle has a boxed-bottom made by stitching the two sides on the oblong strip of cloth measuring two by ten inches. At the top or mouth the bag is turned under to the depth of two inches so that when the

AKED EQUAL TO SITUATION

Example of the Soft Answer That Turneth Away Wrath—Also the Truth.

One of Dr. Aked's most ardent supporters when that divine was pastor of Mr. John D. Rockefeller's church is fond of telling what he considers a striking example of Dr. Aked's wit. Dr. Aked was fond of taking long country walks, and one day, being far in the country and wandering through a field, he and his friend noticed a sign nailed to a tree. "No trespassing here."

Hurrying to get out of the forbidden ground they met a farmer, who assailed them grimly with the remark:—"Trespassers in this field are prosecuted."

Dr. Aked smiled at the late farmer. "But we are not trespassers, my good man," said he.

"What be you then?" demanded the farmer.

"We are Presbyterians, my dear sir," replied Dr. Aked and walked away.

CHILD'S HEAD

A MASS OF HUMOR

"I think the Cuticura remedies are the best remedies for eczema I have ever heard of. My mother had a child who had a rash on its head when it was real young. Doctor called it baby rash. He gave us medicine, but it did no good. In a few days the head was a solid mass, a running sore. It was awful; the child cried constantly. We had to hold him and watch him to keep him from scratching the sore. His suffering was dreadful. At last we remembered Cuticura Remedies. We got a dollar bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, a box of Cuticura Ointment, and a bar of Cuticura Soap. We gave the Resolvent as directed, washed the head with the Cuticura Soap, and applied the Cuticura Ointment. We had not used half before the child's head was clear and free from eczema, and it has never come back again. His head was healthy and he had a beautiful head of hair. I think the Cuticura Ointment very good for the hair. It makes the hair grow and prevents falling hair." (Signed) Mrs. Francis Lund, Plain City, Utah, Sept. 19, 1910.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

He Was Shown in Missouri. "An Englishman who recently arrived in this country went out into the Marion county to visit some of the Lord Scully lands, and while wandering about ran over a small white shunk," says Tom O'Neal. "Afterwards, on making inquiry as to what kind of animal it was and the name of it, he was told that it was a pikelet. After he had changed his clothes he sat down and wrote to his family back in England as follows:

"I have been out looking over the country today, and in traveling about met with an American cat, a beautiful little creature, but I think it had the most offensive breath, don't you know, of any animal I ever saw in my life."—Kansas City Journal.

Strong Healthy Women

If a woman is strong and healthy in a womanly way, motherhood means labor but little suffering. It is the fact that the many women suffer from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organs and are unfitted for motherhood. This can be remedied.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Cures the weaknesses and disorders of women. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned in motherhood, making them healthy, strong, vigorous, virile and elastic.

"Favorite Prescription" banishes the indispositions of the period of expectancy and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It quickens and vitalizes the feminine organs, and ensures a healthy and robust baby. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits.

It Makes Weak Women Strong. It Makes Sick Women Well. Honest druggists do not offer substitutes, and urge them upon you as "just as good." Accept no secret nostrum in place of this non-secret remedy. It contains a drop of alcohol and not a grain of habit-forming or injurious drugs. Is a pure glyceric extract of healing, native American roots.

A Wise and Humane Man.

We saw a farmer do something last week that was worthy of more than a passing notice.

This man brought a load of potatoes to the city, and when he reached the bank on the east side of the river where the man had spotted the sleighing, he took the potatoes off in on and loaded them onto a wagon that he had brought in behind the sleigh.

Then the potatoes were hauled across the bridge to the west side where they were disposed of to a buyer and the man went back, hitched onto his sleigh and left for home.

While doing the thing in this way made a little more work for the man, it gave the horses a show for their life, as they did not have to halt kill themselves dragging a heavily loaded sleigh across the bridge and thru the city streets where the sleighing always disappears before it does in the country.

DANGER IN DELAY.

Kidney Diseases Are Too Dangerous for Grand Rapids People to Neglect.

The great danger of kidney troubles is that they get firm hold before the sufferer recognizes them. Health is gradually undermined. Backache, headache, nervousness, lameness, soreness, limbo, urinary troubles, dropsy, and Bright's disease, follow as the kidneys get worse. Don't neglect your kidneys. Help the kidneys with the reliable and safe remedy, Doan's Kidney Pills, which has cured people right here in Grand Rapids.

Peter Ulo, 337 Eighth St. N., Grand Rapids, Wis., says: "My experience with Doan's Kidney Pills has been so satisfactory that I can recommend them as an ideal kidney medicine. I had weak kidneys and was annoyed by irregular and distressing passages of the kidney secretions. My back ached and often sharp twinges darted through my sides. Nothing helped me in the least until I took Doan's Kidney Pills. Since learning of this remedy, I have taken a few doses off and on and have thus kept my kidneys in good working order."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

CENTRAL SENeca

Won't it be nice when we can say spring is here and hear the birds sing once more.

Miss Ethel Topping visited at the W. H. George home on Saturday.

Mrs. John Patrick is very low at this writing.

Hugh Ellis has finished hauling his wood to your city which he sold to Fred Bogert.

We hope the city of Grand Rapids will try and put a few dollars in repairing the road on Grand Ave. so the city limits here this spring as it needs it very badly.

SOUTH RUDOLPH

Rudolph seems to be one of our leading towns in the making of roads, as they have bought rock from August Beata, John Corner and N. E. Warren.

The stone was hauled down as far as Emil Steegle's clearing where the stone crusher will be placed by the first of May. The stone will be first and hauled on the roads and rolled down into the ground which will make a fine piece of road. After the roads are once fixed that way it will be fixed for good. The time has come when the money which is voted for the roads is being put to some good use.

Before money has been raised to put on various roads and still no good has been received yet. And a good share of our road taxes has been paid by the tax payers hauling sand into holes and covering up corduroys, and in a year or so the sand had gone out of sight. If the money which has been wasted in such a manner had been used in building good roads such as they are preparing to build near the Steegle farm, we would by this time have some good roads. As far as making the taxes higher they will not be so much higher that we will notice it, as the county and state and towns and all of the big business places, such as the drug stores and all places of business in each town help.

Merritt Denniston helped Peter Krause butcher some fine hogs last Tuesday afternoon.

John Luckiger has purchased a fine new spring cutter this winter.

Willie Kurer has been hauling his basswood logs to Rudolph where he receives a better price than as if he hauled them to town.

The farmers here are hauling rock from N. E. Warren's place down on Steegle's farm where the stone crusher will be set in the spring.

Joe Demski is now busy building a milk and power house.

John Pischke has purchased a new horse from one of the Sigel farmers. It is the young horse. It matches his others in color and size. We understand he paid about $300.00 for the horse.

John Schiltz has sold his farm in South Rudolph. Mr. Schiltz has been laid up for some time past with rheumatism of the back and legs so that he could only walk a little by the aid of two crutches.

Eddie Johnson and his brother Chas. were around here bidding their schoolmates and friends goodbye as they expect to leave for Rosevelt, Minn. They have been employed at the Birch paper mill and now they will go west for spring work. They have been there before and say that wages are from $28.00 to $32.00 per month.

Leslie Bros. started up their saw mill on Monday. They have about 300,000 feet of nice logs cut for the farmers.

Abstracts of Title

An Abstract of Title recently completed on a piece of valuable property transferred within the past two years disclosed the following condition. That the present owner holds his title to the property on a deed signed by one person who was honestly believed to be the owner.

The Abstract disclosed the fact that through the provisions of a Will there were four other persons who still owned four fifths of the property and the one who thought he was the owner had, in fact, title to only a one-fifth interest.

Deeds are now being obtained to perfect this title.

One of the nicest things in the show line that our people have had the pleasure of listening to of late were the Juvenile Bostonians, that held forth at Daly's Theatre on Saturday and Sunday evenings. There was good singing and plenty of comedy, and the entire show was one of the most pleasing ones that has been seen here. The only drawback to the performances was the fact that there were very small audiences in attendance to the productions.

The concert given last Wednesday evening by the Grand Rapids band was the best ever rendered in this city by the local organization. However, the public showed so little appreciation of the boys' efforts that it is not at all probable that they will go to the trouble of getting up anything more of the kind very soon again. The concert was put on because a large number of our people asked for it, stating that they were disappointed that the band had not given the regular series of concerts this winter.

Out in Oakland, Cal., a woman left her husband because he was too good. She said the monotony of living with a man who never drank, used tobacco and was always mild, tempered was more than she could stand, so she deserted him and allowed him to get a divorce. She said that if he had been of the furniture, she might have continued loving him. Men in this locality should see to it that things around home do not become too commonplace, but stir up the animals occasionally if they want their better half to continue loving them.

Mrs. M. B. Milne received a letter from Mrs. H. C. Willmott, formerly of Biron, but now living at Greenfield, Mass. She reports the family well, and in good spirits over their return to the old home, but complains of the high cost of the necessities of life. As examples, she quotes beef steak as 32 cents the pound, butter 44, and eggs 55 the dozen. Perhaps Grand Rapids prices are not so bad for all.

Beaten at Wausau.

The highschool basketball team from this city went to Wausau on Friday and played the highschool team from there that evening, the game resulting in a victory for the Wausau boys by a score of 33 to 14. In speaking of the game the Wausau Record-Herald says:

"To the spectators it might have seemed that a higher score against the opponents ought to have been made. This fact is explained thus: It was thought that the boys on the home team were getting stale, and in order to prevent this in their playing on Friday night, they practiced only once during the week. The lack of practice in throwing baskets undoubtedly accounts for their ill luck in putting the ball in the basket last night, when their shots were so frequent. At their usual rate, they would easily have piled the score much higher than it was last evening."

"The game started out with fast playing, after a few minutes of which Wausau proceeded to score several baskets. Following this, both teams had a number of good shots, neither putting the ball in the basket. Then Grand Rapids scored a field basket and a few foul throws, between times Wausau putting in the ball."

"The first half ended in favor of Wausau, 16 to 9."

"In the second half both teams went into the game with more vigor and played a harder game throughout the remainder of the time. After about ten minutes fast play with a field and foul basket for Wausau, the game was delayed a minute for a slight knock. The game was renewed and a little fumbling followed but was quickly checked and Wausau kept the ball for some time. Johnson and Turner each making a basket. For the next few minutes neither team scored but by clever work of the forwards and close guarding by Wausau men, the local team managed to keep the ball in their hands. At this point Brown was put in and the remaining time was a period of fast playing, time being called when the score stood 33 to 14, with Wausau victorious over their old rivals, Grand Rapids."

City Treasurer Sam Church transacted business in Wausau on Tuesday.
